

Article X. Other crimes committed using information and communication technologies

Each State Party shall take, in accordance with the fundamental principles of its domestic law, such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to criminalize terrorism, trafficking in persons, incitement to subversive or armed activities, extremism, including racism and xenophobia, rehabilitation of Nazism, justification of genocide, crimes against peace and humanity, illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, weapons, counterfeit medicines and medical devices, inciting to suicide or leading to its commission, involving minors in committing illegal actions dangerous to their life and health, committed using information and communication technologies.

2. This Convention is not an obstacle to the recognition by a State Party as a crime of any other unlawful act committed intentionally using ICT and resulting in significant damage.
