The Gender Dimensions of Corruption

UNODC

United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime

First generation research:

Are women less corrupt than men?

More recent research:

- Gender equality is important
- Opportunity matters
- The single-gender networks
- Breaking the status quo

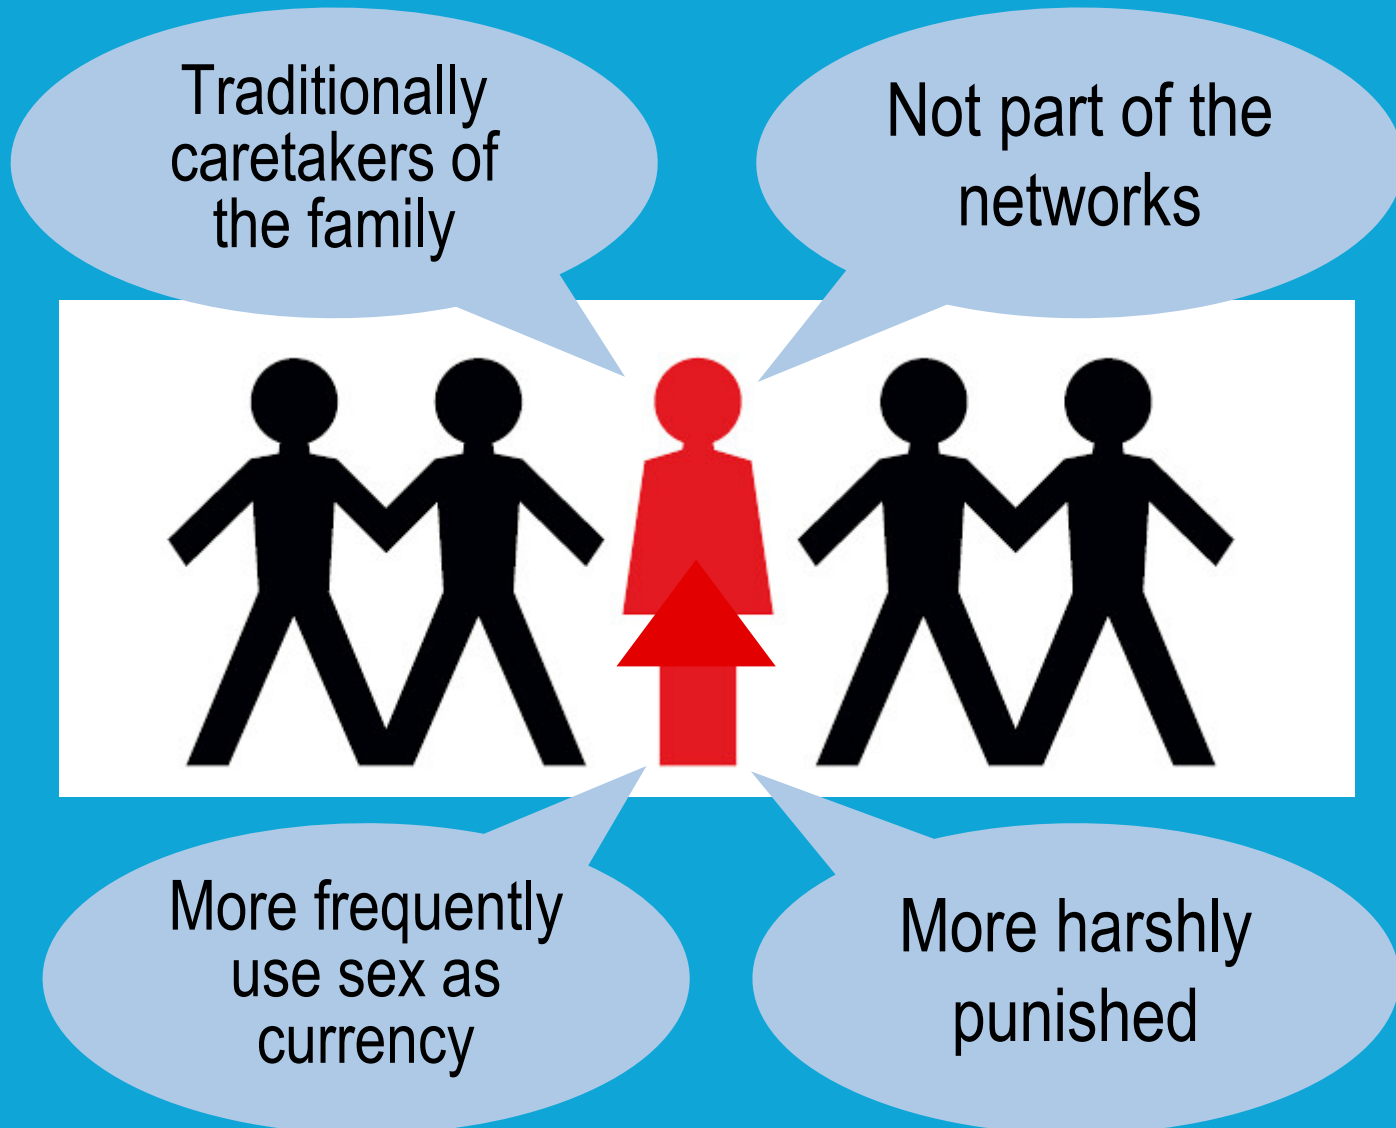

UNODC

More research is needed

- Gender disaggregated data needed to facilitate evidence-based policymaking
- Enable the development of gender-specific approaches to fight corruption
- Need to complement this with qualitative investigation/analysis

Gender mainstreaming anti-corruption programmes

- Looks at the human implications of any activity
- Highlights the differences between women and men and thereby potential differential impact
- Ensure that activities and programmes are tailored to benefit men and women equally

Gender and Corruption Expert Group Meeting

Bangkok – September 2018

UNODC

United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime

- Gender, sport and corruption
- Strengthen education on gender and corruption at schools and universities
- Women as anti-corruption champions
- Build gender-sensitive criminal justice systems, in particular reporting, witness and whistle-blower protection systems

There is no justice in a corrupt society.

Challenge corruption.
Your voice is power!
