

Marco Foddi

Marco Foddi is the Programme Manager of INTERPOL's Illicit Markets Sub-Directorate, a dedicated INTERPOL Unit that brings together member countries, civil society and the private sector to collectively tackle the issue of environmental crime as well as pharmaceutical crime, intellectual property infringements and digital piracy.

Marco has almost twenty years of experience in the field of the international development industry, having served in different managerial roles both in the private and public sector.

Amongst others, Marco worked as external Senior Key Expert at the European Investment Bank and as Project Manager in environmental security at the World Customs Organization.

Marco brings to his position a well-established background in political science and economics.

He holds three Master degrees in "International Relations", "Development Economics and International Development" and "Foreign Trade - International Business".