

Jennifer Bramlette serves as the Coordinator for Information and Communication Technology (ICT) at the United Nations Counter-Terrorism Committee Executive Directorate (CTED) in New York. In this role, she focuses on issues relating to preventing and countering the use of ICT and related new and emerging technologies for terrorist purposes, to include: the use of artificial intelligence and other digital tools; online content moderation; online investigations and electronic evidence; data protection and privacy. Ms. Bramlette has also served as the Strategic Advisor to CTED's Executive Director and as a regional desk officer in CTED. She additionally was the Programme Manager and Senior Advisor for the Global Programme against Money Laundering, Proceeds of Crime and the Financing of Terrorism (GPML) at UNODC.

Before joining the United Nations in 2007, Ms. Bramlette worked for the United States Department of Defense and the private sector. She holds a Master's Degree in International Peace and Security from Kings College London, UK, and conducted her PhD work in international law at the London School of Economics and Political Science. She is certified as a Project Management Professional (PMP).
