Annex I

P8—SENIOR EXPERTS GROUP RECOMMENDATIONS

To combat Transnational Organized Crime efficiently members recommend the following:

1. States should review their laws governing criminal offences, jurisdiction, law enforcement powers and international cooperation, as well as their measures dealing with law enforcement training and crime prevention, to ensure that the special problems created by Transnational Organized Crime are effectively addressed.

2. With the aim of improving mutual assistance, States should, as needed, develop mutual legal assistance arrangements or treaties, and exercise flexibility in the execution of requests for mutual assistance.

3. States should, where feasible, render mutual assistance, notwithstanding the absence of dual criminality.

4. States developing mutual assistance treaties should ensure that the treaties:
   a. Provide a clear description of the scope of the assistance available,
   b. Encourage a speedy process for assistance,
   c. Are as comprehensive as possible in terms of assistance available, and
d. Reflect the principle that evidence will be gathered in the manner sought by the Requesting States, unless the procedures are contrary to the fundamental principles of the law of the Requested State.

To further facilitate cooperation against Transnational Organized Crime, States should consider negotiating arrangements in areas that are not covered by Mutual Legal Assistance Treaties.

5. States should establish a Central Authority which would be structured to provide speedy coordination of requests. The Central Authority should provide a quality control and prioritizing function for both incoming and outgoing requests to take into account both the seriousness of the offence and the urgency of the request.

At the same time, the Central Authority should not be seen as an exclusive channel for assistance between States. Direct exchange of information between law enforcement agencies should be encouraged to the extent permitted by domestic laws or arrangements.

6. States should prepare and distribute to other States materials that would describe the channels of communication for mutual assistance and extradition and the process for obtaining such assistance from that State.

7. In cases where a criminal activity occurs in several countries, States with jurisdiction should coordinate their prosecutions and the use of mutual assistance measures in a strategic manner so as to be more efficient in the fight against transnational criminal groups.

8. States should be encouraged to develop, through treaties, arrangements and legislation, a network for extradition.

States should modernize their extradition treaties by eliminating the lists of crimes and allowing for extradition for conduct punishable in both States by deprivation of liberty in excess of an agreed minimum period.

States should make best efforts to ensure that their domestic arrangements for extradition are flexible enough to permit extradition to States of a different legal tradition. They should seek to identify and eliminate obstacles to extradition, including those that may arise from the differences between legal systems, by, for example, simplifying evidentiary and procedural requirements.

9. States should ensure that their domestic arrangements for extradition are as effective and expeditious as possible.

States should also consider the possibility of extradition without a treaty.

10. If extradition of nationals is not permitted by the Requested State, and the extradition of one of its nationals is requested, the Requested State should:
(1) allow for conditional extradition on the condition that it is only for trial and that its national be promptly returned after trial to its territory for service of any sentence within the limits of the law of the Requested State, or

(2) allow for transfer/surrender, when it is permitted by domestic law, only for trial and on the condition that its national be promptly returned after trial to its territory for service of any sentence within the limits of the law of the Requested State, or

(3) apply the rule of aut dedere, aut judicare by, at the request of the Requesting State, submitting the case to its competent authorities in order that proceedings may be taken if they are considered appropriate.

11. States should promote other techniques for mutual education that will facilitate mutual assistance and extradition, such as language training, secondments and exchanges between personnel in Central Authorities or between executing and requesting agencies.

Training courses, joint seminars and information exchange sessions should be encouraged on a bilateral, regional and world wide basis.

12. Consideration should also be given to posting in other States representatives of prosecuting agencies or of judicial authorities.

13. States should provide effective protection for individuals who have given or agreed to give information or evidence, or who participate or who have agreed to participate in an investigation or prosecution of an offence, and for the relatives and associates of those individuals who require protection, because of risk to the security of the person.

14. States should consider, as appropriate, reciprocal arrangements for the protection of witnesses and other endangered persons.

15. States should consider adopting appropriate measures to ensure the protection of witnesses during criminal proceedings. These might include such methods as testifying by telecommunications or limiting the disclosure of the address and identifying particulars of witnesses.

Consideration should be given to the temporary transfer as witnesses of persons in custody, enlargement of the admissibility of written statements, and the use of modern technology, such as video links, to overcome some of the current difficulties with obtaining the testimony of witnesses located outside the prosecuting State.

16. States should review their laws in order to ensure that abuses of modern technology that are deserving of criminal sanctions are criminalized and that problems with respect to jurisdiction, enforcement powers, investigation, training, crime prevention and international cooperation in respect of such abuses are effectively addressed. Liaison between law enforcement and prosecution personnel of different States should be improved, including the sharing of experience in addressing these problems. States should promote study in this area and negotiate arrangements and agreements to address the problem of technological crime and investigation.
17. States should take all other lawful steps available under domestic legislation, to ensure that they do not provide safe havens for criminals.

18. We commend the work done by Interpol and World Customs Organization calling upon these organizations to maintain and develop their support for operational activity, facilitating as rapid as possible an exchange of information between law enforcement agencies. We call upon them to focus on a strategic overview of the methods of, and trends in, Transnational Organized Crime for the benefit of all their member countries.

19. In order to facilitate the work of law enforcement practitioners we will, on request, provide brief guides on our respective legal systems and on the mandates of relevant agencies.

20. States should identify within their existing structures central contact points for the purpose of facilitating contact between their operational agencies. It may be useful to locate these points in liaison with the Interpol National Central Bureau.

21. We stress the important contribution that liaison officers can make to the fight against Transnational Organized Crime. We encourage States to make the most effective use possible of their liaison officers in other countries and to consider additional postings. We stress the need for liaison officers to have access, in accordance with the law of the host country, to all agencies of that country with relevant responsibilities.

22. We reiterate our condemnation of drug trafficking which is a major source of finance for Transnational Organized Criminal Groups.

Therefore we:

- Reaffirm the importance of the three United Nations Conventions (1961, 1971 and 1988) which are fundamental to action against illicit drugs,

- Call on all States to adopt and fully implement legislation in accordance with those conventions,

- Believe in the value of giving the widest publicity to information issued by official international bodies, such as the International Narcotics Control Board, on illicit drug production, trafficking and the proceeds of the illicit drug trade,

- Will work in all relevant fora to prevent the diversion of chemical precursors used in illicit drug production and take necessary steps to implement fully all relevant international agreements,

- Welcome and support implementation of the recommendations of the United Nations International Drug Control Programme working group on maritime cooperation.

23. In order to ensure more effective transnational crime prevention, and foster public safety, we will develop strategies to identify and combat the illicit traffic in firearms.

In furtherance of this goal, and in support of the specific recommendations contained in the May 1995 resolution from the Ninth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and the July 1995 United Nations Economic and Social Council resolution, we will, and encourage other States to, review existing firearms laws and regulations to facilitate discussion at an international level.

We will promote information exchange among our relevant law enforcement authorities.

We will encourage States to enhance the exchange of information useful for law enforcement purposes (e.g., data for the identification of illicit firearms and specific information on tests conducted on firearms and ammunition which have been used in the course of criminal activities).

24. States should ensure that immigration services play their part in the fight against Transnational Organized Crime. We note the involvement of Transnational Organized Crime in alien smuggling and call upon all States to enact legislation to criminalize such smuggling of persons. Immigration services and other agencies should:

- Exchange information on the transnational movement of organized criminals,

- Have as full as possible an exchange of information on forged and stolen documents used by traffickers,

- Consider the most effective means for its communication.

We will take necessary steps to improve the quality of our travel documents. We encourage other States to improve theirs and will assist them to do so.

25. We support the exchange of law enforcement expertise regarding scientific and technological developments such as advances in forensic sciences.

26. We emphasize the relevance and effectiveness of techniques such as electronic surveillance, undercover operations and controlled deliveries. We call upon States to review domestic arrangements for those techniques and to facilitate international cooperation in these fields, taking full account of human rights implications. We encourage States to exchange experiences of their use.

27. We emphasize the importance of giving the fullest possible protection to sensitive information received from other countries.

The competent authorities of different States should advise each other as to the requirements regarding the disclosure of information in the course of judicial and administrative proceedings, and discuss in advance potential difficulties arising from those requirements.

A transmitting State may make conditions for the protection of sensitive information before deciding whether to transmit it. A receiving State must abide by the conditions agreed with the transmitting State.

28. Building on current cooperative arrangements, the different agencies in our countries will develop their work together in specific law enforcement projects targeted on Transnational Organized Crime. We have formulated practical guidance on project-based action and commend this approach to all States.
Project-based action involves bilateral and multilateral priority setting, targeting, resourcing and assessment of law enforcement operations drawing on the strength of the full range of competent agencies.

29. We welcome the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering resolve to extend criminalization of money laundering to other serious offences.

30. States should consider adopting legislative measures for the confiscation or seizure of illicit proceeds from drug trafficking and other serious offences, asset forfeiture, as required, and the availability of provisional arrangements, such as the freezing or seizing of assets, always with due respect for the interests of bona fide third parties. States should also consider the introduction of arrangements for the equitable sharing of such forfeited assets.

31. States should consider implementing measures to detect and monitor the physical transportation of cash and bearer negotiable instruments at the border, subject to strict safeguards to ensure proper use of information and without impeding in any way the freedom of legitimate capital movements.

32. States should adopt the necessary legislative and regulatory measures to combat corruption, establish standards of good governance and legitimate commercial and financial conduct, and develop cooperation mechanisms to curb corrupt practices.

33. We agree to share information on practical anti-money laundering techniques and to draw on the experience gained to adapt and improve national and international training activities in this area, in conjunction with the action of the Financial Action Task Force on Money Laundering.

34. In order to improve understanding and information on the detection of financial networks linked to Transnational Organized Crime (in particular investments by Transnational Organized Crime), we encourage States to take measures to gather financial information and, as much as possible, facilitate the exchange of such information, including exchanges between law enforcement agencies and regulatory bodies.

35. We urge States to adhere to and fully implement existing relevant multilateral Conventions whose provisions effectively contribute to the fight against all forms of Transnational Organized Crime in particular the Conventions concerning control of illicit drugs.

36. We will keep under review the possibility of supplementing existing Conventions and adopting new instruments, in response to developing needs in the fight against Transnational Organized Crime.

37. We support and encourage the provision and reporting of clear and accessible information on adhesion to and implementation of the main Conventions.

38. In order to avoid wasteful duplication and to ensure that limited resources are used to best effect, we urge International Organisations to coordinate their work programmes and to concentrate their efforts within their areas of competence on activities of practical value to member States.

39. We will work together in the governing bodies of International Organisations whenever possible, in order to give more coherent impetus and coordination to the fight against Transnational Organized Crime.
40. We will seek to ensure that all International Organisations that play an effective role in the fight against Transnational Organized Crime have adequate resources to fulfil their mandate.

We will also examine possibilities for providing appropriate financial resources for specific, practical and viable projects developed by competent International Organisations.

Concerned with the growing threat of organized crime, including the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, money laundering, illicit traffic in arms, nuclear material and explosive devices, motor vehicles, objects of arts,

Concerned also with the increasing threat of organized crime to global security and criminal justice,

Aware that organized crime, in its national and transnational dimensions, destabilizes international relations, including interregional, regional, subregional and bilateral cooperation, by exerting influence on politics, the media, public administration, judicial authorities and the economy by establishing commercial or business-like structures,

Convinced that a flexible and efficient framework for multilateral and bilateral cooperation is required to intensify law enforcement, criminal justice and crime prevention activities of Member States,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 49/159, in which it approved the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime,

Recalling further the recommendations of the Regional Ministerial Workshop on Follow-up to the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime,

Bearing in mind the United Nations model legal arrangements, such as the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, the Model Treaty on the Transfer of Proceedings in Criminal Matters, the Model Treaty on Extradition, the Model Treaty on the transfer of Supervision of Offenders Conditionally Sentenced or Conditionally Released and the Model Treaty for the Prevention of Crimes that Infringe on the Cultural Heritage of Peoples in the Form of Movable Property,

2. For each Contracting State ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to the Convention after the deposit of the twentieth instrument of such action, the Convention shall enter into force on the thirtieth day after the deposit by such State of that relevant instrument.
Article 20

1. The Contracting State may propose an amendment and file it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall thereupon communicate the proposed amendment to the Contracting States, with a request that they indicate whether they favour a conference of Contracting States for the purpose of considering and voting upon the proposals. In the event that, within four months from the date of such communication, at least one third of the States favour such conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of Contracting States present and voting at the conference shall be submitted to the General Assembly of the United Nations for approval.

2. An amendment adopted in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present article shall enter into force when it has been approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations and accepted by a two-thirds majority of Contracting States.

3. When an amendment enters into force, it shall be binding on those State Parties which have accepted it, other Contracting States still being bound by the provisions of the present Convention and any earlier amendments which they have accepted.

Article 21

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall receive and circulate to all States the text of reservations made by Contracting States at the time of ratification, acceptance, approval or acceding.

2. A reservation incompatible with the object and purpose of the present Convention shall not be permitted.

3. Reservations may be withdrawn at any time by notification to that effect addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall then inform all States. Such notification shall take effect on the date on which it is received by the Secretary-General.

Article 22

A Contracting Party may denounce the present Convention by written notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation becomes effective one year after the date of receipt of the notification by the Secretary-General.

Article 23

The Secretary-General of the United Nations is designated as the depository of the present Convention.

Article 24

The original of the present Convention, of which the Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned plenipotentiaries, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Convention.
Annex IV

1. The working group was established pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/27 and its mandate had been determined in paragraph 10 of that resolution. The General Assembly, in its resolution 51/120, requested the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice to consider as a matter of priority the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime, taking into account the views of all States on that matter, with a view to finalizing its work on this question as soon as possible. The Commission was also requested to report through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly at its fifty-second session on the results of its work on that question. The working group was therefore given the task of assisting the Commission in implementing the above-mentioned requests of the General Assembly.

2. The working group had before it the following documents:

(a) Report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime;\(^8\)

(b) Report of the Secretary-General on the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime;\(^9\)

(c) Report of the informal meeting on the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime, held at Palermo, Italy, from 6 to 8 April 1997;\(^10\)

(d) Report of the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting on Extradition, held at Siracusa, Italy, from 10 to 13 December 1996.\(^11\)

3. The working group was also provided with the following documents:

(a) Non-paper of Germany on an alternative solution for a United Nations convention on combating transnational organized crime;

(b) Views of the United States of America as to the most effective means for discussion of the issues of elaboration of conventions;

\(^8\) E/CN.15/1997/7.

\(^9\) E/CN.15/1997/7/Add.1.

\(^10\) E/CN.15/1997/7/Add.2, annex.

(c) The forty recommendations elaborated by the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime and endorsed at Lyon, France, from 27 to 29 June 1996;

(d) Non-paper containing a tentative idea of the Japanese delegation in relation to the elaboration of a convention on measures against organized crime.

4. The working group first discussed the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized transnational crime. The working group was of the view that its contribution would be most useful to the Commission if it would consider the scope and content of such a convention, rather than engage in a drafting exercise, which would be outside the mandate given by the Council and the Assembly and would require significantly more time than that available. The working group felt that organized crime presented grave global dangers to development and security and that the challenges it posed were becoming greater with time. In determining the scope and content of such a convention, the international community could draw on the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, but should be able to come up with new and more innovative and creative responses.

5. The working group recognized that it was desirable to develop a convention that would be as comprehensive as possible. In this connection, several States indicated that their remaining reservations on the effectiveness and usefulness of a convention were contingent upon its scope of application and the measures for concerted action which such an instrument would include. Several States stressed the importance they attached to the nature of a convention as a framework instrument. One difficult issue would be arriving at an acceptable definition of organized crime. It was indicated, however, that that issue was not insuperable, especially in the presence of a strong and sustained political will. Several States were of the view that the definition was not necessarily the most crucial element of a convention and that the instrument could come into being without a definition of organized crime. In this connection, it was also suggested that the phenomenon of organized crime was evolving with such rapidity that a definition would limit the scope of application of a convention, by omitting activities which criminal groups might engage in. Other States felt that the absence of a definition would send the wrong signal regarding the political will and commitment of the international community. In addition, avoiding the issue would eventually create problems regarding the implementation of a convention. In view of all this, concerted efforts to arrive at a solution should be made. There were several very important advances made at the regional level, where the matter of some of the constituent elements of a workable definition had been satisfactorily resolved. One example was the solution found for defining participation in organized criminal groups, used in the European convention on extradition. The problem of definition could be solved by looking at each of its elements separately. It was suggested that a first step towards a definition might be to use the definitions of offences contained in other international instruments. It was agreed that the work required in connection with the definition could not be expected of the working group, but should be undertaken by governmental experts at a future time. There was also discussion about whether in elaborating the definition, the focus should be on the transnational aspects of organized crime or on organized crime in general. It was pointed out that the mandate of the Commission was related to organized transnational crime but that the issue required further serious consideration in the context of determining the overall scope of a convention.

6. In the context of the discussion on whether such a convention should include a list of offences, some States expressed their support for the inclusion of terrorist acts in such a list. Many States were of a contrary view, recalling the initiatives currently under way in the United Nations and other forums on terrorism and the conclusions of the Commission at its fifth session.

7. The working group agreed that it would be useful to focus on widely accepted constituent elements of organized crime. In the discussion that ensued, the elements identified included some form of organization; continuity; the use of intimidation and violence; a hierarchical structure of groups, with division of labour; the pursuit of profit; and the purpose of exercising influence on the public, the media and political structures.

8. The working group decided that the best way to proceed for the purpose of advancing the issue was to seek common ground, utilizing as many previous contributions as possible and building on the positive experience and valuable work done at other forums, such as the European Union and the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime. The draft United Nations framework convention against organized crime\textsuperscript{13} was a useful point of departure and a good basis for further work. In this connection, the working group decided to discuss matters related to international cooperation in criminal matters that would form an essential part of an international legally binding instrument. The overriding concern would be to equip the international community with an effective instrument to strengthen action against organized crime.

9. The working group agreed that extradition was crucial to international cooperation against organized crime and, as such, it would form a central component of such a convention. A number of States indicated that the extradition of nationals presented several legal and constitutional problems. While some States were in the process of studying the matter in depth, with a view to finding more efficient solutions and improving international cooperation, it would be difficult for them to comply with a provision envisaging extradition of nationals. It was consequently deemed important to incorporate in a convention a more detailed provision regarding the application of the principle aut dedere aut judicare. Since there were a number of countries where extradition of nationals was possible and it was also believed that a trend in that direction might develop in the future, it was agreed that the provision of article 7 of the draft United Nations framework convention was a good basis for discussion and should be retained. It was also agreed that the option of extraditing nationals should be left open, while specifying that extradition would be governed by national constitutional and legal provisions. It was suggested that in finding an acceptable solution to this matter, the formula contained in the draft convention on terrorist bombings regarding extradition could be relied upon. Inspiration could also be drawn from the Statute of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991.\textsuperscript{14} In addition, reference was made to article 6 of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, which could be used as a model to arrive at a more comprehensive extradition regime.

10. On the question of corporate criminal liability (contained in article 3 of the draft United Nations framework convention), several States indicated that the concept was still not reflected in their legislation. In those States, criminal liability was personal and corporate entities could be held accountable only under civil and administrative law. Even where the concept of corporate criminal liability had begun to be introduced, such liability was attached to the person of the executive responsible for the management of the corporate entity. It was explained that the problem was one of legal tradition and philosophy, while it was recognized that \textsuperscript{13} A/C.3/51/7, annex.

\textsuperscript{14} S/25704 and Corr.1, annex.
corporate criminal liability was a powerful deterrent, particularly in view of the tendency of criminal groups to operate using corporate entities, either infiltrated or set up for the purpose of masking the nature of their illicit activities. The issue of corporate criminal liability was considered important but it required further clarification and elaboration in order to take into account the varying legal traditions of countries.

11. Regarding the recognition of foreign convictions (contained in article 4 of the draft United Nations framework convention), it was indicated that there were a number of issues that required clarification and further work. It was clarified that the term conviction was used in the sense of a finding of guilt and that the article tried to capture the essence of and build upon the concept reflected in paragraph 5 (h) of article 3 of the 1988 Convention. While the issue of prior criminal history was deemed important, because of its potential usefulness to the expeditious judicial processing of organized crime cases, it was necessary to discuss in detail the modalities for the exchange of the relevant information and the weight to be given to previous convictions in the framework of each jurisdiction. It was also indicated that the matter was directly related to the scope of application of such a convention, particularly regarding substantive law. It was important to formulate a provision on this issue that would ensure avoidance of problems related to double jeopardy or to offences existing in one jurisdiction but not in another.

12. On police cooperation (article 11 of the draft United Nations framework convention), the issue of joint police operations merited further discussion, as it created a number of concerns for several countries. The desirability of closer cooperation between law enforcement agencies had been expressed in the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan, but it was deemed important to stress that such cooperation would be pursued in accordance with national legislation. Similar provisions were included in the 1988 Convention and could be useful to the discussion of this question. With regard to paragraphs 2 and 3 of article 11, it was pointed out that the concept they contained was valid, but further work would be necessary in specifying modalities for application, especially in the context of a legally binding instrument such as a convention.

13. Regarding article 12 of the draft United Nations framework convention, it was agreed that the idea was very important, in view of the essential role reliable information played in action against organized crime.
The provision, however, required considerable further work because the issue of databases involved a number of important matters, such as accessibility, protection of data, and safeguards related to the protection of privacy, in addition to costs for the creation and maintenance of such databases. All these issues needed to be resolved in a manner acceptable to all, while retaining the usefulness of a database.

14. There was general acceptance of the importance of witness protection (reflected in article 13 of the draft United Nations framework convention). Some States took the opportunity to indicate their intention to establish witness protection programmes, while others advised caution in approaching the matter, because of the risks associated with this mechanism, which related to the social conditions prevailing in countries and the possibility of diminished credibility of certain witnesses.

15. The working group then discussed the issue of mutual assistance (article 10 of the draft United Nations framework convention), which was deemed one of the most important cooperation mechanisms to feature in a convention against organized crime. Article 10 was similar to the provisions of other United Nations instruments, but in view of the more comprehensive nature of the proposed convention, the provisions on mutual assistance should be more detailed and more innovative. The 1988 Convention could be used as a source of inspiration in order to arrive at the level of detail that was necessary. In this connection, reference was also made to the report of the informal meeting held at Palermo, which had discussed this issue extensively and included material for further consideration.
16. The working group agreed that considerable work was required on the issue of the convention. For this purpose, it proposed that an open-ended intergovernmental inter-sessional group of experts should be established to consider all pending proposals related to the issue of conventions, as well as all elements thereof and appropriate cooperation modalities and mechanisms.

17. The working group discussed and endorsed the proposals of the Secretary-General on the follow-up action for the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime. The working group expressed its support for the maintenance and expansion of the central repository on national legislation and other information and data related to organized transnational crime. It was suggested that the Secretariat should make efforts to identify methods for collecting information and legislative texts rather than merely addressing requests to States in the form of notes verbales. Concern was expressed regarding the resources necessary to undertake the activities required for follow-up action. In this connection, the importance attached to practical action to foster the implementation of the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan was reiterated.

Annex V

VIEWS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AS TO THE MOST EFFECTIVE MEANS FOR DISCUSSION BY THE COMMISSION ON CRIME PREVENTION AND CRIMINAL JUSTICE AT ITS SIXTH SESSION OF THE ISSUE OF ELABORATION OF CONVENTIONS

1. The United States of America considers it very important that discussion of all proposals for elaboration of multilateral conventions to combat criminal conduct take place in the working group of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice devoted to the Naples Political Declaration and Global Action Plan against Organized Transnational Crime, in particular, the question of the elaboration of an international convention against organized crime. Such a discussion will be useful as a means for stimulating thought on the extent to which the various proposals can and should be incorporated into a single instrument. In addition, it will enable delegations to focus on the priority to be set concerning the criminal conduct governed by these different proposals.

2. In addition to Poland’s proposal for a United Nations framework convention on combating organized crime,\textsuperscript{15} the following five proposals for multilateral conventions are either the subject of draft resolutions to be considered at this session, or have been broached in informal discussions among member States: Argentina’s proposal for a convention to combat trafficking in children; the recommendation of the Buenos Aires expert group on combating corruption; a possible multilateral convention on firearms;\textsuperscript{16} a possible convention on trafficking in illegal migrants;\textsuperscript{17} and a possible convention on theft of motor vehicles.\textsuperscript{18} However, Poland’s

\textsuperscript{15} A/C.3/51/7, annex.

\textsuperscript{16} Mexico has introduced a proposal for such a convention at the Organization of American States.

\textsuperscript{17} It is the understanding of the United States delegation that a member of the Western European and Other Group is exploring the possibility of introducing such a proposal.

\textsuperscript{18} Poland has introduced a resolution calling for the adoption of a model treaty on combating this form of criminality.
The proposed framework convention on organized crime is intended to cover all of the other proposals in whole or in part by including, under article 1, trafficking in persons, corruption of public officials, illicit trafficking or stealing of arms and illicit trafficking or stealing of motor vehicles. Thus, these or any other potential single-issue conventions may be to some degree duplicative of Poland’s proposal and, if consensus is reached on inclusion of such types of criminality in a framework convention on organized crime, it may subsequently be unnecessary to negotiate further instruments.

3. Moreover, as more fully set forth in the appendix to the present annex, certain types of cooperation mechanisms cannot be dispensed with in combating organizations that engage in multiple forms of criminality; such mechanisms include law enforcement information exchange, training and technical assistance, mutual assistance, asset seizure and forfeiture, witness protection, extradition and harmonization of substantive criminal laws. The international community may decide that a single instrument would best ensure that all of these areas are addressed with sufficient consistency, that limited resources for negotiating conventions and fighting organized crime are used most efficiently and that the fight against organized crime is carried out in a comprehensive and logical fashion. If so, it would be inadvisable to continue to discuss the elaboration of other instruments separately.

4. Finally, discussion of the merits of all potential instruments in the working group will be useful for the purpose of comparing the gravity of the various forms of criminality and determining which aspects constitute the most significant transnational criminal problems. The discussion of the level of prioritization that should be given to each form of criminality may assist the Commission in determining the extent to which other multilateral conventions should be pursued separately from a framework convention on organized crime, or whether they should be pursued at all.

Appendix

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS 35 AND 36 OF THE SENIOR EXPERTS GROUP

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR COMBATING TRANSNATIONAL ORGANIZED CRIME: THE SUPPLEMENTATION OF EXISTING MULTILATERAL CONVENTIONS OR ADOPTION OF NEW CONVENTIONS TO ASSIST IN THE FIGHT AGAINST TRANSNATIONAL ORGANIZED CRIME

Introduction

1. Recommendation 35 of the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime calls for States to adhere to and implement relevant existing multilateral conventions whose provisions contribute to the fight against all forms of transnational organized crime, while recommendation 36 contemplates a review of the feasibility of updating existing conventions and adopting new instruments in order to enhance the ability of States to fight transnational organized crime.

19 The attached appendix was previously submitted to stimulate discussion in the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime on means of implementing recommendations 35 and 36 of its forty recommendations for combating transnational organized crime.
2. Among the existing conventions that the Senior Experts Group has catalogued for the purpose of considering whether updating is feasible are: the Slavery Convention (1926) as amended by the 1953 Protocol;\(^{20}\) the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery (1956);\(^{21}\) the International Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency (1929); the International Forced Labour Convention (1930);\(^{22}\) the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others (1949);\(^{23}\) the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property (1971);\(^{24}\) and the international convention on mutual administrative assistance for the prevention, investigation and repression of customs offences (1977).\(^{25}\)

3. In addition, Poland introduced at the fifty-first session of the General Assembly a draft United Nations framework convention against organized crime.\(^{26}\) The proposal by Poland raises issues regarding the feasibility of adopting a single convention to combat transnational organized crime, in contrast with the updating of existing instruments or adoption of a number of new instruments each dealing with a separate type of criminal conduct.

4. Various options available for using multilateral instruments to fight transnational organized crime are briefly analysed below. Section I discusses the above-listed existing conventions, outlining some of the modifications that would be required to effectively update them to address contemporary phenomena of transnational organized crime. Section II examines additional multilateral instruments that could be adopted in order to combat transnational organized crime. Finally, section III contains a discussion of the potential benefits and drawbacks arising from the elaboration of a single consolidated framework convention on organized crime.

1. UPDATING EXISTING INSTRUMENTS

A. Slavery Convention (1926) as amended by the 1953 Protocol and the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery (1956)

5. The Slavery Convention as amended by the 1953 Protocol defines slavery and slave trading, obligating States parties to take various actions, including criminalization, to suppress those practices. The Supplementary Convention defines a number of practices akin to slavery (including debt bondage, serfdom, marriage practices exploitative of women's labour and exploitation of children's labour by their parents or guardians); it also obligates States parties to abolish those practices, criminalize certain specified conduct integral to the perpetuation of slavery and the slave trade and cooperate with each other in carrying out the purposes of the Convention. The conventions have been widely ratified.

6. Neither the Slavery Convention nor the Supplementary Convention as presently drafted deal specifically with transnational organized crime, nor can they readily be interpreted to impose an obligation upon States parties to criminalize such related manifestations of modern organized crime as the exploitation of illegal immigrants by organized criminal groups that have smuggled them across international boundaries, the use by criminal groups of compulsion as part of their perpetuation of the international prostitution trade or the compelling of minors to participate in international pornography rings. However, amendment of these instruments may be of assistance in combating these forms of trafficking in persons.\(^\text{27}\)

7. Effective broadening of these conventions will require States to reach agreement both on the need to criminalize a number of additional classes of conduct and on general definitions of those offences. In addition, since both the Slavery Convention and the Supplementary Convention lack specific cooperation mechanisms to suppress such conduct between national law enforcement authorities, supplementation would require the drafting of a number of such mechanisms.\(^\text{28}\)

8. On balance, effective modernization would appear to require negotiation of a significant number of new provisions. Negotiating a supplemental instrument could also be complicated if some States regarded the occasion as an opportunity to reopen the debate on issues resolved at the time the conventions were originally concluded. Given these factors, the Senior Experts Group should weigh whether supplementation would be preferable to the elaboration of a new instrument or instruments to combat these forms of criminal conduct.

\(^\text{27}\) It may be that these and other similar activities engaged in by organized criminal groups also could be appropriately included under the International Forced Labour Convention or the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, both of which are discussed below.

\(^\text{28}\) In addition to cooperation measures frequently provided for in more modern multilateral instruments, such as designating covered offences as extraditable between States parties, non-application of the political offence doctrine and the imposition of general obligations to cooperate, the Senior Experts Group recommended a number of additional mechanisms for consideration, including: providing mutual assistance notwithstanding the absence of dual criminality (recommendation 3); gathering evidence in the manner sought by the requesting State (recommendation 4); strategic coordination of prosecutions and mutual assistance measures where a criminal activity occurs in several countries (recommendation 7); allowing for the possibility of transfer or conditional extradition of nationals (recommendation 10); exchanges of information and personnel between law enforcement agencies of different countries (recommendations 11, 12, 21, 23-28 and 34); witness protection arrangements (recommendations 13-15); use of investigative techniques such as electronic surveillance, undercover operations and controlled deliveries (recommendation 26); confiscation of proceeds of crime (recommendation 30); and monitoring of financial instruments (recommendations 31 and 34).
B. International Forced Labour Convention (1930)

9. The International Forced Labour Convention limits the conditions under which "forced or compulsory labour" can be required and obligates States parties to suppress and criminalize those forms of compelled labour not sanctioned by the Convention.

10. Although the exploitation of compelled labour by criminal groups described in section I.A above may be violative of the terms of the International Forced Labour Convention in its present form, few States parties have established these forms of exploitation as discrete offences or have provided for enhanced penalties to deter sophisticated criminal groups from committing such offences. Thus, to be an effective means of suppressing the exploitation of persons controlled by organized criminal groups, the Convention would have to be amended accordingly.

11. As in the case of the slavery conventions, given the need to define and punish additional classes of criminal conduct and to include provisions related to law enforcement cooperation, adoption of a supplemental or amended instrument may require as extensive an effort as the elaboration of a separate new instrument or instruments.

C. Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others (1949)

12. The Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others obligates States parties to criminalize the procuring of persons to engage in prostitution and other conduct integral to the propagation of prostitution. It contains more extensive provisions for law enforcement cooperation than the Slavery Convention or the International Forced Labour Convention, including provisions requiring: (a) covered offences to be considered extraditable between States parties; (b) prosecution of offenders by a State party that declines to extradite on the basis of the offender's nationality; (c) cooperation by States parties (subject to domestic law) in the execution of letters of request regarding covered offences; (d) establishment of central authorities to coordinate implementation of the Convention and cooperate with other States; and (e) sharing of information regarding offences and offenders between States parties.

13. Effective updating of this Convention could prove difficult, given that a significant number of States have not ratified it. In any case, substantial modification would appear to be required to ensure the broad criminalization of such phenomena as the exploitation of minors in conjunction with the production of pornographic materials or sex tourism and to ensure that States parties are obligated to impose suitably enhanced punishment on participants in organized criminal schemes to engage in such conduct. Moreover, although this instrument focuses to a greater extent on cooperation mechanisms than either the Slavery Convention or the International Forced Labour Convention, many additional forms of cooperation recommended by the Senior Experts Group as useful in fighting transnational organized crime are not presently included and a number of them could presumably be inserted.29

29 For a more complete inventory of potential cooperation mechanisms that could be provided for, see footnote 28, above.
D. International Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency (1929)

14. The International Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency obligates States parties to criminalize counterfeiting or alteration of domestic or foreign currency, as well as the distribution of counterfeit or altered currency. It also provides for: (a) confiscation of such currency; (b) covered offences to be considered extraditable between States parties; (c) prosecution of offenders by State parties that decline to extradite on the basis of the offender's nationality; (d) cooperation between States parties (subject to domestic law) in the execution of letters of request regarding covered offences; (e) establishment of central authorities to coordinate implementation of the Convention and cooperate with States; and (f) sharing of information between States parties regarding offenders and evidence of offences.

15. The application of this instrument is limited in scope to counterfeit or altered currency. Significant supplementation or the adoption of new instruments would be required to address such issues of concern as counterfeiting or alteration of credit cards, electronic transfers and other negotiable instruments and the need to provide for enhanced cooperation mechanisms in combating such criminal conduct.

16. The Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property obligates States parties to suppress illicit traffic in archaeological, historical, artistic and other property designated by States as being of particular cultural value, without explicitly requiring criminalization of proscribed conduct. The Convention also provides for, inter alia, confiscation and return of cultural property to States parties from which it was removed and the designation of authorities for implementation of the Convention.

17. Effectively updating this Convention could prove difficult in practice, for a significant number of States have not ratified it. In addition, given that it contains no explicit criminalization or law enforcement cooperation requirements, modernization would appear to entail as much effort as would the creation of new instruments governing other related areas.

F. International convention on mutual administrative assistance for the prevention, investigation and repression of customs offences (1977)

18. The international convention on mutual administrative assistance for the prevention, investigation and repression of customs offences provides a broad framework for joint investigation, exchanges of information and other mutual assistance between States parties in connection with violations of customs laws, including smuggling of narcotics, cultural property and other contraband. It does not obligate States to criminalize particular forms of conduct.

19. The Convention has been ratified by three members of the political group of eight (P-8) and 31 other States. Although additional States have expressed an interest in ratifying the Convention since it was amended in 1995 to permit contracting parties to make reservations, the permitting of reservations may hamper any effort to achieve broad implementation. Nonetheless, many of the forms of cooperation set forth in the Convention are useful mechanisms for international law enforcement and can serve as examples of cooperation mechanisms that might be drafted for insertion in other instruments governing transnational smuggling.
II. ADOPTION OF INSTRUMENTS ADDRESSING OTHER FORMS OF CRIMINAL CONDUCT

20. In addition to supplementing and modernizing existing conventions, Senior Experts Group recommendation 36 calls for consideration of the adoption of new instruments to respond to developing needs in the fight against transnational organized crime. In a number of other recommendations, the Senior Experts Group has already identified additional forms of criminal conduct for which there is a need for a concerted international law enforcement response to the infiltration of organized crime. Similar expressions of concern have been made in other international forums and by various States in their individual efforts to combat transnational organized crime. Some of the areas in which the need for action may be particularly acute and regarding which the Senior Experts Group may wish to evaluate the utility of adopting a new instrument or instruments are as follows:

- Extortion and other violent crimes carried out by organized groups for profit;
- Bribery and other corrupt practices;
- Smuggling of and trafficking in nuclear materials for weapons of mass destruction;
- Intellectual property violations;
- Money-laundering;
- Crimes involving computers and other advanced technologies;
- Illicit trafficking in firearms; and
- Auto theft.

21. Such an evaluation will require weighing such factors as the likelihood of elaborating an instrument that will enjoy widespread acceptance within the international community, the likely degree of effectiveness the instrument will have in aiding the suppression of the targeted conduct and the commitment of time and resources that will be required to elaborate a series of instruments governing these types of criminal conduct.30

III. ADOPTION OF A SINGLE INSTRUMENT ON TRANSTATIONAL ORGANIZED CRIME

22. Consideration could also be given to the alternative approach of adopting a single integrated instrument on various forms of criminal conduct engaged in by transnational groups. As previously stated, Poland introduced such a draft convention at the fifty-first session of the General Assembly.

30 A supplemental or alternative approach to dealing with some of the areas listed above could be the development and widespread dissemination of model legislation, accompanied by multilateral and bilateral technical assistance to facilitate enactment and enforcement of the new laws.
23. The major advantage of a single instrument creating obligations to criminalize and cooperate in combating a number of categories of conduct is the advantage it offers in terms of preserving time and resources over the negotiation of a series of new or supplemental instruments, each addressing a limited class of criminal conduct. Since each separate convention would likely contain a number of similar (if not identical) provisions, for example with regard to extradition of fugitives, legal assistance and other cooperation mechanisms, negotiation of a single instrument could be expected to save considerable time and avoid needless renegotiation of such common provisions. In addition, the promulgation of a single instrument would appear useful to arriving at an integrated response to particularly serious forms of transnational organized crime, since specialists in a number of law enforcement disciplines would collaborate in devising an effective unified strategy for cooperation in combating these phenomena and since a single secretariat administering the convention would be more easily able to identify and correct practical problems arising in the implementation of the strategy.

24. The structure of the convention itself could take several possible forms. One approach could be for it to address a specific list of offences of the type set forth in section II, above. Another approach might be to draft a convention that, like the proposal by Poland, seeks to define the term “organized crime”, and to include specific types of conduct under its rubric.

25. The former approach, by virtue of being less complex, may enjoy some advantages over the latter. Initially, it may be difficult to arrive at a definition of “organized crime” that enjoys widespread acceptance. As illustrated in the inventory of documents prepared by the Senior Experts Group, numerous different definitions of the term “organized crime” have been devised. Given the great diversity among modern criminal groups, reaching a single meaningful definition will likely prove elusive and may interfere with the successful conclusion of the convention. Moreover, great care would have to be taken to ensure that the definition of “organized crime” did not inadvertently legitimize actions by undemocratic Governments to suppress legitimate political opposition.

26. In addition, a number of States may wish the definition of organized crime to encompass terrorism,\textsuperscript{31} leading to problematic results. For example, the inclusion of terrorism may lead to an effort to define it more precisely, a task that will be extremely difficult given the traditional divide between those States that consider acts of violence carried out by “national liberation movements” to be permissible and those that wish to proscribe such conduct. The effort to define terrorism will thus divert attention from other issues, and will ultimately not be conducive to achieving consensus. Inclusion of terrorism may also result in duplication of provisions contained in the significant number of existing instruments aimed at combating terrorism.\textsuperscript{32}

27. Even if no effort is made to define these terms, there may be some difficulty in reaching agreement on the list of conduct to be proscribed under the convention. The convention may be seen by some States as an opportunity to seek inclusion of modes of criminality as to which there can be at best a marginal claim that they constitute a significant transnational criminal problem. For example, a small number of States have called for conventions to combat illicit international adoption, trafficking in body parts or racial hatred. However, any effort to broaden the convention too greatly would divert focus from types of criminality that need to be addressed most urgently and could also make it more difficult to identify appropriate cooperation mechanisms for combating the conduct proscribed by the convention.

\textsuperscript{31} For example, Poland’s proposal includes “terrorist acts” as a manifestation of organized crime.

\textsuperscript{32} The P-8 Senior Expert Group on Terrorism is also currently considering a United States proposal for a United Nations convention for the suppression of terrorist bombings.
28. The United States has prepared a discussion draft of a convention for the suppression of transnational organized crime, illustrating how a convention adhering to the recommendations of the Senior Experts Group could be structured. It is hoped that consideration of that document, together with the Polish proposal, may be useful to the discussion of this issue.

29. It is conceivable that there are other approaches that might be viable in this area, including the elaboration of a single instrument addressing a much more limited list of criminal activities than that described either in the discussion draft of the United States, presented below, or in the proposal by Poland, on which there is clear consensus that immediate criminalization and enhanced cooperation are required.

Draft convention for the suppression of transnational organized crime

The States Parties to this Convention,

Deeply concerned about the threat posed by the rapid development of transnational organized crime,

Being convinced that the rapid growth and geographical extension of transnational organized crime is a major concern of all countries and that it calls for a concerted response from the international community,

Desiring to conclude an effective international convention directed specifically against serious organized transnational crime,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

OFFENCES AND SANCTIONS

1. Each State Party shall make punishable by appropriate penalties that take into account their grave nature, the following conduct:

[Insert definition of transnational organized crime, or offences covered by this convention]

2. The provisions of this article shall not affect the obligations regarding the criminalization of offences pursuant to any other multilateral treaty.

33 Title used in the 1988 Convention for the article defining the crimes covered by the Convention.

34 Many of the offences on the list may already be punished under the laws of States parties, but without enhanced punishment if a part of organized criminal activity. It may be necessary to draft additional language to ensure such enhanced punishment.
Article 2

ESTABLISHMENT OF JURISDICTION

1. Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences set forth in article 1 when the offence is committed in the territory of that State.

2. A State Party may also establish its jurisdiction over any such offence when:

(a) The alleged offender is a national of that State;

(b) The offence was committed against a national of that State; or

(c) The offence has substantial effects in that State.

3. Each State Party shall also take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over these offences in cases where the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite or transfer that person for trial pursuant to article 4, paragraph 6, to any of the States Parties that have established their jurisdiction in accordance with paragraph 1 or 2 of this article.

4. This Convention does not exclude the exercise of any criminal jurisdiction established by a State Party in accordance with its domestic law.

5. The provisions of this article shall not affect the obligations with regard to the establishment of jurisdiction over offences pursuant to any other multilateral treaty.

Article 3

EXTRADITE OR PROSECUTE

1. The State Party in the territory of which the offender or the alleged offender is found, if it does not extradite that person or transfer that person for trial pursuant to article 4, paragraph 6, shall be obliged, upon request of the State Party seeking extradition or transfer, in cases where article 2 applies without exception whatsoever and whether or not the offence was committed in its territory, to submit the case without delay to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution, through proceedings in accordance with the laws of that State. Those authorities shall take their decision in the same manner as in the case of any other offence of a grave nature under the law of that State.

2. Any person regarding whom proceedings are being carried out in connection with any of the offences set forth in article 1 shall be guaranteed fair treatment at all stages of the proceedings, including enjoyment of all the rights and guarantees provided by the law of the State in the territory of which that person is present.
Article 4

ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS

1. Upon being satisfied that the circumstances so warrant, any State Party in the territory of which the offender or the alleged offender is present shall, in accordance with its laws, take that person into custody or take other measures to ensure that person’s presence for such time as is necessary to enable any criminal or extradition proceedings to be instituted. Such State shall immediately make a preliminary inquiry, in accordance with its own laws.35

2. Any person regarding whom the measures referred to in paragraph 1 of this article are being taken shall be entitled:

(a) To communicate with the nearest appropriate representative of the State of which that person is a national or which is otherwise entitled to establish such communication or, if that person is a stateless person, the State in the territory of which that person habitually resides;

(b) To be visited by a representative of that State.36

3. The rights referred to in paragraph 2 of this article shall be exercised in conformity with the laws and regulations of the State in the territory of which the offender or the alleged offender is present, subject to the provision that the said laws and regulations must enable full effect to be given to the purposes for which the rights accorded under paragraph 1 of this article are intended.

Article 5

RULES RELATING TO EXTRADITION37

1. The offences set forth in article 1 shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between any of the States Parties. States Parties undertake to include such offences as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be concluded between them.

2. If a State Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, the requested State Party may at its option consider this Convention as a legal basis for extradition in respect of the offences set forth in article 1. Extradition shall be subject to the other conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

3. States Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize the offences set forth in article 1 as extraditable offences between themselves, subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested State.

35 International Convention against the Taking of Hostages (General Assembly resolution 34/146, annex, of 17 December 1979), article 6, paragraph 1.

37 Senior Experts Group recommendation 10.
4. The offences set forth in article 1 shall be treated, for the purposes of extradition between States Parties, as if they had been committed not only in the place in which they occurred but also in a place within the jurisdiction of the State Party requesting extradition.\textsuperscript{38}

5. For purposes of extradition between the States Parties, none of the offences set forth in article 1 shall be regarded as a political offence or as an offence connected with a political offence or as an offence inspired by political motives.

6. If a State Party denies extradition to another State Party for an offence set forth in article 1 because the person sought is a national of the Requested Party, the Requested Party shall, upon request of the Requesting Party, transfer the person to the Requesting Party for trial or other proceedings and the person transferred shall be returned to the Requested Party to serve any sentence imposed in the Requesting Party as a result of the trial or proceedings for which transfer was made.

7. With respect to the offences as defined in this Convention, the provisions of all extradition treaties and arrangements applicable between States Parties are modified as between States Parties to the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of this Convention.

\textbf{Article 6}

\textbf{MUTUAL LEGAL ASSISTANCE}

1. States Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with proceedings brought in respect of the offences set forth in article 1, including assistance in obtaining evidence at their disposal necessary for the proceedings.

2. States Parties shall carry out their obligations under paragraph 1 in conformity with any treaties on mutual assistance that may exist between them or pursuant to domestic law.\textsuperscript{39}

3. For offences established in accordance with this Convention, a State Party shall not decline to render mutual legal assistance on the ground of bank secrecy or on the ground that there is an absence of dual criminality.\textsuperscript{40}

4. States Parties shall adopt measures sufficient to enable a person in the custody of one State Party whose presence in another State Party is requested for purposes of assistance under this Convention to be transferred if the person consents and if the competent authorities of both States agree. For purposes of this paragraph:

(a) The State to which the person is transferred shall have the authority and obligation to keep the person transferred in custody, unless otherwise authorized by the State from which the person was transferred;

\textsuperscript{39} Given the potentially broad scope of this Convention and the possibility that it will be open to ratification or accession by any State, narrower legal assistance obligations of the kind set forth here may be appropriate.

\textsuperscript{40} Senior Experts Group recommendation 3; see the 1988 Convention, article 7, paragraph 5.
(b) The State to which the person is transferred shall return the person to the custody of the State from which the person was transferred as soon as circumstances permit or as otherwise agreed by the competent authorities of both States;

(c) The State to which the person is transferred shall not require the State from which the person was transferred to initiate extradition proceedings for the return of the person; and

(d) The person transferred shall receive credit for service of the sentence imposed in the State from which he was transferred for time served in the custody of the State to which he was transferred.

5. In order to ensure the protection of witnesses, States Parties shall, on request, limit disclosure of the addresses or identifying particulars of persons who testify. States Parties shall also adopt measures to permit, upon request, persons to testify by telecommunications or video link or use other modern technology in order to provide testimony to the prosecuting State.\textsuperscript{41}

\textbf{Article 7}

\textbf{CONFISCATION}\textsuperscript{42}

1. States Parties shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to enable confiscation of:

   (a) Proceeds derived from offences set forth in article 1 or property the value of which corresponds to that of such proceeds;

   (b) Property, equipment or other instrumentalities used in or intended for use in offences set forth in article 1.

2. States Parties shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to enable the identification, freezing or seizure of any item referred to in paragraph 1 of this article for the purpose of eventual confiscation.

3. The State Party that has custody over proceeds or instrumentalities of offences shall dispose of them in accordance with its laws. A Party may transfer all or part of such assets, or the proceeds of their sale to another Party, to the extent permitted by the laws of the transferring Party and upon such terms as it deems appropriate.

4. The provisions of this article shall not be construed to prejudice the rights of third parties.

States Parties shall give consideration to transferring to one another proceedings for criminal prosecution of offences established in accordance with this Convention in cases where such transfer is considered to be in the interests of a proper administration of justice.

Article 9

OTHER FORMS OF COOPERATION AND ASSISTANCE\textsuperscript{44}

1. States Parties shall cooperate closely with one another, consistent with their respective domestic legal and administrative systems, to enhance the effectiveness of law enforcement action to combat offences set forth in this Convention. Each State Party shall, in particular, adopt effective measures:

(d) In appropriate cases and if not contrary to domestic law, to establish joint teams, taking into account the need to protect the security of persons and operations, in order to carry out the provisions of this paragraph. Officials of any State Party participating in such teams shall act as authorized by the appropriate authorities of the Party in whose territory the operation is to take place; in all such cases, the States Parties involved shall ensure that the sovereignty of the Party on whose territory the operation is to take place is fully respected;

Annex VI

GERMAN VIEWS ON AN ALTERNATIVE SOLUTION FOR A UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION ON COMBATING ORGANIZED TRANSNATIONAL CRIME: A PROVISIONAL PERSPECTIVE

1. Organized transnational crime threatens both economic and political structures of States. It is a global menace endangering industrial and developing societies alike and requires a global response. The draft United Nations framework convention against organized crime, submitted to the General Assembly by the Government of Poland,55 offers a good basis for discussion of this urgent problem in the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice.

55 A/C.3/51/7.
2. So far, national and international efforts to produce a workable definition of organized transnational crime have been unsuccessful. The definition contained in the draft United Nations framework convention, article 1, is, from a German perspective, in part too narrow, in part too broad. Germany considers organized transnational crime not as a clearly definable criminal offence but as a complex phenomenon of criminality. Elements of a description could probably be agreed upon and set out in the preamble of such a convention. It is problematic even to give a paradigmatic list of specific crimes because, whereas everybody can agree on what constitutes murder, there is no international consensus on what constitutes, for example, corruption of public officials. This would lead to insuperable difficulties in penalizing such criminal behaviour and establishing jurisdiction.

3. From a German point of view, these difficulties could be circumvented by the following alternative solution:

(a) The elaboration of a comprehensive United Nations convention on organized transnational crime should be based on the Model Treaty on Extradition\(^{56}\) and the Model Treaty on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters;\(^{57}\)

(b) Such a convention should refrain from reference to specific crimes but the point of referral would be the framework given by the Model Treaty on Extradition, article 2, at least for extraditable offences. For the granting of legal assistance no specific point of referral would probably be necessary;

(c) A gap in the international armoury against organized transnational crime seems to stem from the fact that some legal systems do not penalize criminal behaviour that is not directly aimed at a concrete crime and, therefore, cannot be qualified as participation, whereas for example German, French and Italian laws penalize such participation on the basis of membership in a "criminal association". The convention ought to contain an obligation to penalize on these lines. This could follow the formulation of the Convention, drawn up on the basis of article K.3 of the Treaty on European Union, relating to extradition between the member States of the European Union of 27 September 1996, article 3, on conspiracy and association to commit offences:

Each party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to establish as a criminal offence under its domestic law, when committed intentionally, the participation as an accomplice in or the organization or direction of others to commit an offence in the field of drug trafficking or other forms of organized crime.

(d) Indispensable for an effective fight at the national and international levels against organized transnational crime are adequate provisions for skimming off the proceeds of crime. The convention should, therefore, oblige Member States to legislate to this effect;

(e) In all international forums, there is general agreement that the scope for the imposition of penalties for money-laundering in connection with drug trafficking is unsatisfactory. The convention should provide that, in principle, any other serious offence in addition to drug-related offences can be considered a predicate offence for money-laundering;

\(^{57}\) General Assembly resolution 45/117, annex, of 14 December 1990.
(f) Following the model of the United Nations Convention against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances of 1988, the convention should contain provisions for the domestic implementation of foreign forfeiture measures;

(g) A precondition for fighting transnational organized crime on a national or international level is an effective witness protection programme (see the relevant European Union recommendations, the forty recommendations elaborated by the Senior Experts Group on Transnational Organized Crime and endorsed at Lyon, France, in June 1996 and the idea underlying the draft United Nations framework convention, article 13);

(h) In addition, the convention should make provision for police cooperation and training (see the draft United Nations framework convention, article 11, and the 1988 Convention, article 9);

(i) Finally, some new ideas put forward by the Council of Europe, the European Union and other international forums in the area of extradition and mutual assistance could be taken up in a United Nations convention.

The Economic and Social Council recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

The General Assembly,

6. Requests the Commission, at its seventh session, to finalize the programme for the Tenth Congress and to make its final recommendations, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly, taking into account that the Tenth Congress should deal with a limited number of precisely defined substantive topics reflecting the urgent needs of the world community and include practical technical workshops on well-focused issues related to the substantive agenda items;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a discussion guide for the consideration of the Commission, in cooperation with the institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders affiliated with the United Nations, and invites Member States to be actively involved in that process;

DRAFT RESOLUTION III

Crime prevention and criminal justice measures to eliminate violence against women

The Economic and Social Council recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

The General Assembly,

Strongly condemning all forms of violence against women,

Stressing that the effective implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women contributes to the elimination of violence against women and that the implementation of the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women strengthens and complements that process,

Recalling the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women: Action for Equality, Development and Peace, held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, and, in particular, the determination of Governments to prevent and eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls,

Recognizing the need to fully implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and to develop strategies and practical measures in that field,

MODEL STRATEGIES AND PRACTICAL MEASURES ON THE ELIMINATION OF VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN IN THE FIELD OF CRIME PREVENTION AND CRIMINAL JUSTICE

1. The multifaceted nature of violence against women suggests that different strategies are required for different manifestations of violence and the various settings in which it occurs. The practical measures, strategies and activities described below can be introduced in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice to deal with the problem of violence against women. Except where otherwise specified, the term “women” encompasses “girl children”.

2. Recalling the definition of violence against women in the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women and reiterated in the Platform for Action adopted by the Fourth World Conference on Women, held at Beijing from 4 to 15 September 1995, the Model Strategies and Practical Measures on the Elimination of Violence against Women in the Field of Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice build on the measures adopted by Governments in the Platform for Action, bearing in mind that some groups of women are especially vulnerable to violence.

3. The Model Strategies and Practical Measures specifically acknowledge the need for an active policy of bringing into the mainstream a gender perspective in all policies and programmes related to violence against women and of achieving gender equality and equal and fair access to justice, as well as establishing the goal of gender balance in areas of decision-making related to the elimination of violence against women. The Model Strategies and Practical Measures should be applied as guidelines in a manner consistent with relevant international instruments, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, with a view to furthering their fair and effective implementation.

DRAFT RESOLUTION V

International cooperation in criminal matters*

The Economic and Social Council recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

The General Assembly,

Acknowledging the benefits of the enactment of national laws providing the most flexible basis for extradition, and bearing in mind that some developing countries and countries with economies in transition may lack the resources for developing and implementing treaty relations in extradition, as well as appropriate national legislation,

Bearing in mind that United Nations model treaties on international cooperation in criminal matters provide important tools for the development of international cooperation,

Convinced that existing arrangements governing international cooperation in law enforcement must be continuously reviewed and revised to ensure that the specific contemporary problems of fighting crime are being effectively addressed at all times,

* For the discussion, see chapter V.
Convinced that reviewing and revising the United Nations model treaties will contribute to increased efficiency in combating criminality,

Commending the work of the Intergovernmental Expert Group Meeting on Extradition, held at Siracusa, Italy, from 10 to 13 December 1996, to implement in part Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/27 of 24 July 1995 by reviewing the Model Treaty on Extradition and by proposing complementary provisions for it, elements for model legislation in the field of extradition, and training and technical assistance for national officials engaged in the field of extradition,

Commending also the International Association of Penal Law and the International Institute of Higher Studies in Criminal Sciences for providing support for the Meeting and the Governments of Finland, Germany and the United States of America and the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute for their cooperation in the organization of the Meeting,

Recognizing that the work of the Intergovernmental Expert Group could not be fully completed given the limited amount of time available to it and was therefore ultimately limited to the field of extradition,

Determined to implement Economic and Social Council resolution 1995/27, section I, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to convene a meeting of an intergovernmental expert group that should explore ways of increasing the efficiency of extradition and related mechanisms of international cooperation,

MOSCOW DECLARATION

We participants gathered at the Conference on International Cooperation in the Prevention and Control of the Theft of and Illicit Trafficking in Motor Vehicles, held at Moscow on 28 February - 2 March 1997,

1) endorse the recommendations of the Warsaw Conference on Theft of, and Illicit Trafficking in Motor Vehicles (2-3 December 1996).

Among the various issues emerging from the Warsaw Conference, we recommend the following points for immediate action by Governments:

a) as a first priority, to support the development of the Interpol ASF International Stolen Vehicle Database;

b) to establish national centralized vehicle registration systems based on a standard set of data, which include the physical description and identifying numbers of the motor vehicle as well as details of the registered owner or keeper;

c) to request that vehicles written off by insurers are reported to the centralized vehicle registration system, or alternatively, that authorities check with private data bases which keep such records, in order to prevent the vehicle identification number (VIN) of a vehicle that has been written off from being used to hide the identity of a stolen vehicle;

d) to find appropriate means in order to ensure that prior to registration of an imported vehicle, national authorities confirm that a vehicle has not been reported stolen in any country of prior registration, inter alia, using the Interpol ASF system;

e) to promote the adoption of a standard world VIN system format applying to all vehicles manufactured within the country or exported to other countries, to provide for the secure marking of identifying numbers on component parts of the vehicles, and to encourage the keeping of such records by manufacturers and their being made available to relevant law enforcement agencies;

f) to consider mandating the installation of effective security devices by manufacturers, including effective immobilizers and perimeter security;

g) to conclude on a bilateral or multilateral basis agreements on the return of stolen vehicles based on the Model Treaty for the Return of Stolen or Embezzled Vehicles, contained in the appendix to the Warsaw recommendations; and
h) to promote better operational cooperation and exchange of information among the relevant law enforcement and other agencies at the national and international levels.

2) draw to the attention of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice of the United Nations the following:

a) the elaboration and the implementation of the technical cooperation activities to be requested of the Secretary-General in accordance with paragraph 2(g) of the Warsaw recommendations; such activities should include the elaboration of a comprehensive training manual on vehicle identification; and

b) in the context of technical assistance and training, the continuation of research on the scope, methods and organization of groups engaged in vehicles theft and trafficking.

Except as provided for in Article 8 below, the Requested Party shall, within [thirty] days of receiving a request for the return of a stolen or embezzled vehicle, determine whether the request for return meets the requirements of the present Treaty and shall notify [the Embassy] of the Requesting Party of its determination.

2. If the Requested Party determines that the request for the return of a stolen or embezzled vehicle meets the requirements of the present Treaty, the Requested Party shall within [fifteen] days of such determination make the vehicle available to the person identified in the request for return as the owner or the owner’s authorized representative. The vehicle shall remain available for the person identified in the request for return as the owner or the owner’s authorized representative to take delivery for at least [ninety] days. The Requested Party shall take necessary measures to permit the owner or the owner’s authorized representative to take delivery of the vehicle and return it to the territory of the Requesting Party.

3. If the Requested Party determines that the request for return does not meet the requirements of the present Treaty, it shall provide written notification to [the Embassy] of the Requesting Party.

Article 8

1. If a vehicle whose return is requested is being held in connection with a criminal investigation or prosecution, its return pursuant to the present Treaty shall be effected when its presence is no longer required for purposes of that investigation or prosecution. The Requested Party shall, however, take all practicable measures to assure that substitute pictorial or other evidence is used wherever possible in such investigation or prosecution so that the vehicle may be returned as soon as possible.
2. If the ownership or custody of a vehicle whose return is requested is the subject of a pending judicial action in the Requested Party, its return pursuant to the present Treaty shall be effected at the conclusion of that judicial action. However, a Party shall have no obligation under the Treaty to return the vehicle if such judicial action results in the award of the vehicle to a person other than the person identified in the request for return as the owner of the vehicle or the owner’s authorized representative.

3. A Party shall have no obligation under the present Treaty to return a vehicle whose return is requested if the vehicle is subject to forfeiture under its laws because it was used in its territory for the commission of a crime. The Requested Party shall not forfeit the vehicle without giving the owner or the owner’s authorized representative reasonable notice and an opportunity to contest such forfeiture in accordance with its laws.

4. A Party shall have no obligation under the present Treaty to return a stolen or embezzled vehicle if no request for return is made within [sixty] days of a notification made pursuant to Article 3 above.

5. If the return of a stolen or embezzled vehicle whose return is requested is postponed, pursuant to paragraphs 1 or 2 of the present Article, the Requested Party shall so notify [the Embassy] of the Requesting Party in writing within [thirty] days of receiving a request for the return of the vehicle.

Article 9

1. The Requested Party shall not impose any import or export duties, taxes, fines or other monetary penalties or charges on vehicles returned in accordance with the present Treaty, or on their owners or authorized representatives, as a condition for the return of such vehicles.

2. Actual expenses incurred in the return of the vehicle, including towing costs, storage costs, maintenance costs, transportation costs, and costs of translation of documents required under the present Treaty, shall be borne by the person or entity seeking its return and shall be paid prior to the return of the vehicle. The Requested Party shall use its best efforts to keep such expenses at reasonable levels.

3. In particular cases, the expenses of return may include the costs of any repairs or reconditioning of a vehicle which may have been necessary to permit the vehicle to be moved to a storage area or to maintain it in the condition in which it was found. The person or entity seeking the return of a vehicle shall not be responsible for the costs of any other work performed on the vehicle while it was in the custody of the authorities of the Requested Party.

Article 10

The mechanisms for the recovery and return of stolen or embezzled vehicles under the present Treaty shall be in addition to those available under the laws of the Requested Party. Nothing in the Treaty shall impair any rights for the recovery of stolen or embezzled vehicles under applicable law.

Article 11

1. Any differences regarding the interpretation or application of the present Treaty shall be resolved through consultations between the Parties.
2. The present Treaty shall be subject to ratification. It shall enter into force on the date of exchange of instruments of ratification.

3. The present Treaty may be terminated by either Party upon a minimum of [ninety] days' written notification.\(^{93}\)

GUIDELINES FOR ACTION ON CHILDREN IN THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE SYSTEM

1. Pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1996/13 of 23 July 1996, the present Guidelines for Action were developed at an expert group meeting held at Vienna from 23 to 25 February 1997 with the financial support of the Government of Austria. In developing the Guidelines for Action, the experts took into account the views expressed and the information submitted by Governments.

2. Twenty-nine experts from 11 States in different regions, representatives of the Centre for Human Rights of the Secretariat, the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF) and the Committee on the Rights of the Child, as well as observers from non-governmental organizations concerned with juvenile justice, participated in the meeting.

I. AIMS, OBJECTIVES AND BASIC CONSIDERATIONS

4. The aims of the Guidelines for Action are to provide a framework to achieve the following:

(a) To implement the Convention on the Rights of the Child and to pursue the goals set forth in the Convention with regard to children in the context of the administration of juvenile justice, as well as to use and apply the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice and other related instruments, such as the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power;

(b) To facilitate the provision of assistance to States parties for the effective implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and related instruments.

5. In order to ensure effective use of the Guidelines for Action, improved cooperation between Governments, relevant entities in the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations, professional groups, the media, academic institutions, children and other members of civil society is essential.

6. The Guidelines for Action should be based on the principle that the responsibility to implement the Convention clearly rests with the States parties thereto.

7. The basis for the use of the Guidelines for Action should be the recommendations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child.

8. In the use of the Guidelines for Action at both the international and national levels, consideration should be given to the following:

96 General Assembly resolution 44/25, annex, of 20 November 1989.
97 General Assembly resolution 44/33, annex, of 29 November 1989.
100 General Assembly resolution 40/34, annex, of 20 November 1985.
(a) Respect for human dignity, compatible with the four general principles underlying the Convention, namely: non-discrimination, including gender-sensitivity; upholding the best interests of the child; right to life, survival and development; and respect for the views of the child;

(b) A rights-based orientation;

(c) A holistic approach to implementation through maximization of resources and efforts;

(d) The integration of services on an interdisciplinary basis;

(e) Participation of children and concerned sectors of society;

(f) Empowerment of partners through a developmental process;

(g) Sustainability without continuing dependency on external bodies;

(h) Equitable application and accessibility to those in greatest need;

(i) Accountability and transparency of operations;

(j) Proactive responses based on effective preventive and remedial measures.

9. Adequate resources (human, organizational, technological, financial and information) should be allocated and utilized efficiently at all levels (international, regional, national, provincial and local) and in collaboration with relevant partners, including Governments, United Nations entities, non-governmental organizations, professional groups, the media, academic institutions, children and other members of civil society, as well as other partners.

A. Measures of general application

10. The importance of a comprehensive and consistent national approach in the area of juvenile justice should be recognized, with respect for the interdependence and indivisibility of all rights of the child.

11. Measures relating to policy, decision-making, leadership and reform should be taken, with the goal of ensuring that:

(a) The principles and provisions of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice are fully reflected in national and local legislation policy and practice, in particular by establishing a child-oriented juvenile justice system that guarantees the rights of children, prevents the violation of the rights of children, promotes children's sense of dignity and worth, and fully respects their age, stage of development and their right to participate meaningfully in, and contribute to, society;
(b) The relevant contents of the above-mentioned instruments are made widely known to children in language accessible to children. In addition, if necessary, procedures should be established to ensure that each and every child is provided with the relevant information on his or her rights set out in those instruments, at least from his or her first contact with the criminal justice system, as well as reminding the child of his or her obligation to obey the law;

(c) The public's and the media's understanding of the spirit, aims and principles of justice centred on the child is promoted, in accordance with the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice.

B. Specific targets

12. States should ensure the effectiveness of their birth registration programmes. In those instances where the age of the child involved in the justice system is unknown, measures should be taken to ensure that the true age of a child is ascertained by independent and objective assessment.

13. Notwithstanding the age of criminal responsibility, civil majority and the age of consent as defined by national legislation, States should ensure that children benefit from all their rights, as guaranteed to them by international law, specifically in this context those set forth in articles 3, 37 and 40 of the Convention.

14. Particular attention should be given to the following points:

(a) There should be a comprehensive child-centred juvenile justice process;

(b) Independent expert or other types of panels should review existing and proposed juvenile justice laws and their impact on children;

(c) No child who is under the legal age of criminal responsibility should be subject to criminal charges;

(d) States should establish juvenile courts with primary jurisdiction over juveniles who commit criminal acts and special procedures designed to take into account the specific needs of children. As an alternative, regular courts should incorporate such procedures, as appropriate. Wherever necessary, national legislative and other measures should be considered to accord all the rights of and protection for the child, where the child is brought before a court other than a juvenile court, in accordance with articles 3, 37 and 40 of the Convention.

15. A review of existing procedures should be undertaken and, where possible, diversion or other alternative initiatives to the classical criminal justice systems should be developed to avoid recourse to the criminal justice systems for young persons accused of an offence. Appropriate steps should be taken to make available throughout the State a broad range of alternative and educative measures at the pre-arrest, pre-trial, trial and post-trial stages, in order to prevent recidivism and promote the social rehabilitation of child offenders. Whenever appropriate, mechanisms for the informal resolution of disputes in cases involving a child offender should be utilized, including mediation and restorative justice practices, particularly processes involving victims. In the various measures to be adopted, the family should be involved, to the extent that it operates in favour of the good of the child offender. States should ensure that alternative measures comply with the Convention, the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice, as well as other existing standards and norms in crime prevention and criminal justice, such as the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for Non-custodial Measures (The Tokyo Rules),\textsuperscript{101} with special regard to ensuring respect for due process rules in applying such measures and for the principle of minimum intervention.

16. Priority should be given to setting up agencies and programmes to provide legal and other assistance to children, if needed free of charge, such as interpretation services, and, in particular, to ensure that the right of every child to have access to such assistance from the moment that the child is detained is respected in practice.

17. Appropriate action should be ensured to alleviate the problem of children in need of special protection measures, such as children working or living on the streets or children permanently deprived of a family environment, children with disabilities, children of minorities, immigrants and indigenous peoples and other vulnerable groups of children.

18. The placement of children in closed institutions should be reduced. Such placement of children should only take place in accordance with the provisions of article 37 (b) of the Convention and as a matter of last resort and for the shortest period of time. Corporal punishment in the child justice and welfare systems should be prohibited.

19. The United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty and article 37 (d) of the Convention also apply to any public or private setting from which the child cannot leave at will, by order of any judicial, administrative or other public authority.

20. In order to maintain a link between the detained child and his or her family and community, and to facilitate his or her social reintegration, it is important to ensure easy access by relatives and persons who have a legitimate interest in the child to institutions where children are deprived of their liberty, unless the best interests of the child would suggest otherwise.

21. An independent body to monitor and report regularly on conditions in custodial facilities should be established, if necessary. Monitoring should take place within the framework of the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice, in particular the United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty. States should permit children to communicate freely and confidentially with the monitoring bodies.

22. States should consider positively requests from concerned humanitarian, human rights and other organizations for access to custodial facilities, where appropriate.

23. In relation to children in the criminal justice system, due account should be taken of concerns raised by intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and other interested parties, in particular systemic issues, including inappropriate admissions and lengthy delays that impact on children deprived of their liberty.

24. All persons having contact with, or being responsible for, children in the criminal justice system should receive education and training in human rights, the principles and provisions of the Convention and other United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice as an integral part of their training programmes. Such persons include: police and other law enforcement officials; judges and magistrates, prosecutors, lawyers and administrators; prison officers and other professionals working in institutions where children are deprived of their liberty; and health personnel, social workers, peacekeepers and other professionals concerned with juvenile justice.

\textsuperscript{101} General Assembly resolution 45/110, annex, of 14 December 1990.
25. In the light of existing international standards, States should establish mechanisms to ensure a prompt, thorough and impartial investigation into allegations against officials of deliberate violation of the fundamental rights and freedoms of children. States should equally ensure that those found responsible are duly sanctioned.

C. Measures to be taken at the international level

26. Juvenile justice should be given due attention internationally, regionally and nationally, including within the framework of the United Nations system-wide action.

27. There is an urgent need for close cooperation between all bodies in this field, in particular, the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the Secretariat, the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, UNICEF, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the International Labour Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the World Health Organization. In addition, the World Bank and other international and regional financial institutions and organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations and academic institutions, are invited to support the provision of advisory services and technical assistance in the field of juvenile justice. Cooperation should therefore be strengthened in particular with regard to research, dissemination of information, training, implementation and monitoring of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, use and application of existing standards, as well as in the provision of technical advice and assistance programmes, for example by making use of existing international networks on juvenile justice.

28. The effective implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, as well as the use and application of international standards through technical cooperation and advisory service programmes, should be ensured by giving particular attention to the following aspects related to protecting and promoting human rights of children in detention, strengthening the rule of law and improving the administration of the juvenile justice system:

(a) Assistance in legal reform;

(b) Strengthening national capacities and infrastructures;

(c) Training programmes for police and other law enforcement officials, judges and magistrates, prosecutors, lawyers, administrators, prison officers and other professionals working in institutions where children are deprived of their liberty, health personnel, social workers, peacekeepers and other professionals concerned with juvenile justice;

(d) Preparation of training manuals;

(e) Preparation of information and education material to inform children about their rights in juvenile justice;

(f) Assistance with the development of information and management systems.

29. Close cooperation should be maintained between the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations of the Secretariat in view of the relevance of the protection of children’s rights in peacekeeping operations, including the problems of children and youth as victims and perpetrators of crime in peace-building and post-conflict or other emerging situations.
D. Mechanisms for the implementation of technical advice and assistance projects

30. In accordance with articles 43, 44 and 45 of the Convention, the Committee on the Rights of the Child reviews the reports of States parties on the implementation of the Convention. According to article 44 of the Convention, these reports should indicate factors and difficulties, if any, affecting the degree of fulfilment of the obligations under the Convention.

31. States parties to the Convention are invited to provide in their initial and periodic reports comprehensive information, data and indicators on the implementation of the provisions of the Convention and on the use and application of the United Nations standards and norms in juvenile justice. 102

32. As a result of the process of examining the progress made by States parties in fulfilling their obligations under the Convention, the Committee may make suggestions and general recommendations to the State party to ensure full compliance with the Convention (in accordance with article 45 (d) of the Convention). In order to foster the effective implementation of the Convention and to encourage international cooperation in the area of juvenile justice, the Committee transmits, as it may consider appropriate, to specialized agencies, UNICEF and other competent bodies any reports from States parties that contain a request, or indicate a need, for advisory services and technical assistance, together with observations and suggestions of the Committee, if any, on those requests or indications (in accordance with article 45 (b) of the Convention).

33. Accordingly, should a State party report and the review process by the Committee reveal any necessity to initiate reform in the area of juvenile justice, including through assistance by the United Nations technical advice and assistance programmes or those of the specialized agencies, the State party may request such assistance, including from the Division, the Centre for Human Rights and UNICEF.

34. In order to provide adequate assistance in response to those requests, a coordination panel on technical advice and assistance in juvenile justice should be established, to be convened at least annually by the Secretary-General. The panel will consist of representatives from the Division, the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, UNICEF, UNDP, the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the institutes comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network and other relevant United Nations entities, as well as other interested intergovernmental, regional and non-governmental organizations, including international networks on juvenile justice and academic institutions involved in the provision of technical advice and assistance, in accordance with paragraph 39 below.

35. Prior to the first meeting of the coordination panel, a strategy should be elaborated for addressing the issue of how to activate further international cooperation in the field of juvenile justice. The coordination panel should also facilitate the identification of common problems, the compilation of examples of good practice and the analysis of shared experiences and needs, which in turn would lead to a more strategic approach to needs assessment and to effective proposals for action. Such a compilation would allow for concerted advisory services and technical assistance in juvenile justice, including an early agreement with the Government requesting such assistance, as well as with all other partners having the capacity and competence to implement the various segments of a country project, thus ensuring the most effective and problem-oriented action. This 102 See the general guidelines regarding the form and contents of periodic reports to be submitted by States parties under article 44, paragraph 1 (b) of the Convention, adopted by the Committee at its 343rd meeting (thirteenth session) on 11 October 1996 (CRC/C/58); and, for a summary of discussions on the topic of the special thematic day of the Committee on the Rights of the Child on the administration of juvenile justice, see the report of the tenth session of the Committee on the Rights of the Child (Geneva, 30 October-17 November 1995) (CRC/C/46, pp. 33-39).

compilation should be continuously developed in close cooperation with all parties involved. It will take into account the possible introduction of diversion programmes and measures to improve the administration of juvenile justice, to reduce the use of remand homes and pre-trial detention, to improve the treatment of children deprived of their liberty and to create effective reintegration and recovery programmes.

36. Emphasis should be placed on formulating comprehensive prevention plans, as called for by the Riyadh Guidelines. Projects should focus on strategies to socialize and integrate all children and young persons successfully, in particular through the family, the community, peer groups, schools, vocational training and the world of work. These projects should pay particular attention to children in need of special protection measures, such as children working or living on the streets or children permanently deprived of a family environment, children with disabilities, children of minorities, immigrants and indigenous peoples and other vulnerable groups of children. In particular, the placement of these children in institutions should be proscribed as much as possible. Measures of social protection should be developed in order to limit the risks of criminalization for these children.

37. The strategy will also set out a coordinated process for the delivery of international advisory services and technical assistance to States parties to the Convention, on the basis of joint missions to be undertaken, whenever appropriate, by staff of the different organizations and agencies involved, with a view to devising longer-term technical assistance projects.

38. Important actors in the delivery of advisory services and technical assistance programmes at the country level are the United Nations resident coordinators, with significant roles to be played by the field offices of the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, UNICEF and UNDP. The vital nature of the integration of juvenile justice technical cooperation in country planning and programming, including through the United Nations country strategy note, is emphasized.

39. Resources must be mobilized for both the coordinating mechanism of the coordination panel and regional and country projects formulated to improve observance of the Convention. Resources for those purposes (see paragraphs 34 to 38 above) will come either from regular budgets or from extrabudgetary resources. Most of the resources for specific projects will have to be mobilized from external sources.

40. The coordination panel may wish to encourage, and in fact be the vehicle for, a coordinated approach to resource mobilization in this area. Such resource mobilization should be on the basis of a common strategy as contained in a programme document drawn up in support of a global programme in this area. All interested United Nations bodies and agencies as well as non-governmental organizations that have a demonstrated capacity to deliver technical cooperation services in this area should be invited to participate in such a process.

E. Further considerations for the implementation of country projects

41. One of the obvious tenets in juvenile delinquency prevention and juvenile justice is that long-term change is brought about when not only are symptoms treated but root causes are also addressed. For example, excessive use of juvenile detention will be adequately dealt with only by applying a comprehensive approach, which involves both organizational and managerial structures at all levels of investigation, prosecution and the judiciary, as well as the penitentiary system. This requires communication, inter alia, with and among police, prosecutors, judges and magistrates, authorities of local communities, administration authorities and with the relevant authorities of detention centres. In addition, it requires the will and ability to cooperate closely with each other.
42. To prevent further overreliance on criminal justice measures to deal with children's behaviour, efforts should be made to establish and apply programmes aimed at strengthening social assistance, which would allow for the diversion of children from the justice system, as appropriate, as well as improving the application of non-custodial measures and reintegration programmes. To establish and apply such programmes, it is necessary to foster close cooperation between the child justice sectors, different services in charge of law enforcement, social welfare and education sectors.

III. PLANS CONCERNED WITH CHILD VICTIMS AND WITNESSES

43. In accordance with the Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power, States should undertake to ensure that child victims and witnesses are provided with appropriate access to justice and fair treatment, restitution, compensation and social assistance. If applicable, measures should be taken to prevent the settling of penal matters through compensation outside the justice system, when doing so is not in the best interests of the child.

44. Police, lawyers, the judiciary and other court personnel should receive training in dealing with cases where children are victims. States should consider establishing, if they have not yet done so, specialized offices and units to deal with cases involving offences against children. States should establish, as appropriate, a code of practice for proper management of cases involving child victims.

45. Child victims should be treated with compassion and respect for their dignity. They are entitled to access to the mechanisms of justice and to prompt redress, as provided for by national legislation, for the harm they have suffered.

46. Child victims should have access to assistance that meets their needs, such as advocacy, protection, economic assistance, counselling, health and social services, social reintegration and physical and psychological recovery services. Special assistance should be given to those children who are disabled or ill. Emphasis should be placed upon family and community-based rehabilitation rather than institutionalization.

47. Judicial and administrative mechanisms should be established and strengthened where necessary to enable child victims to obtain redress through formal or informal procedures that are prompt, fair and accessible. Child victims and/or their legal representatives should be informed accordingly.

48. Access should be allowed to fair and adequate compensation for all child victims of violations of human rights, specifically torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, including rape and sexual abuse, unlawful or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, unjustifiable detention and miscarriage of justice. Necessary legal representation to bring an action within an appropriate court or tribunal, as well as interpretation into the native language of the child, if necessary, should be available.

49. Child witnesses need assistance in the judicial and administrative processes. States should review, evaluate and improve, as necessary, the situation for children as witnesses of crime in their evidential and procedural law to ensure that their rights are fully protected. In accordance with the different law traditions, practices and legal framework, direct contact should be avoided between the child victim and the offender during the process of investigation and prosecution as well as during trial hearings as much as possible. The identification of the child victim in the media should be prohibited, where necessary to protect the privacy of the child. Where prohibition is contrary to the fundamental legal principles of Member States, such identification should be discouraged.
50. States should consider, if necessary, amendments of their penal procedural codes to allow for, inter alia, videotaping of the child's testimony and its presentation in court as official pieces of evidence. In particular, police, prosecutors, judges and magistrates should apply more child-friendly practices, for example, in police operations and interviews of child witnesses.

51. The responsiveness of judicial and administrative processes to the needs of child victims and witnesses should be facilitated by:

(a) Informing child victims of their role and the scope, timing and progress of the proceedings and of the disposition of their cases, especially where serious crimes are involved;

(b) Encouraging the development of child witness preparation schemes to familiarize children with the criminal justice process prior to giving evidence. Appropriate assistance should be provided to child victims and witnesses throughout the legal process;

(c) Allowing the views and concerns of child victims to be presented and considered at appropriate stages of the proceedings where their personal interests are affected, without prejudice to the accused and in accordance with the relevant national criminal justice system;

(d) Taking measures to minimize delays in the criminal justice process, protecting the privacy of child victims and witnesses and, when necessary, ensuring their safety from intimidation and retaliation.

52. Children displaced illegally or wrongfully retained across borders are as a general principle to be returned to the country of origin. Due attention should be paid to their safety, and they should be treated humanely and receive necessary assistance, pending their return. They should be returned promptly to ensure compliance with the Convention on the Rights of the Child. Where the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction of 1980\(^{103}\) or the Hague Convention on the Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption of 1993, approved by the Hague Conference on Private International Law, the Convention on Jurisdiction, Applicable Law, Recognition, Enforcement and Cooperation in Respect of Parental Responsibility and Measures for the Protection of the Child are applicable, the provisions of these conventions with regard to the return of the child should be promptly applied. Upon the return of the child, the country of origin should treat the children with respect, in accordance with international principles of human rights, and offer adequate family-based rehabilitation measures.

53. The United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme, including the institutes comprising the Programme network, the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights/Centre for Human Rights, UNICEF, UNDP, the Committee on the Rights of the Child, UNESCO, the World Bank and interested non-governmental organizations should assist Member States, on their request, within the overall appropriations of the United Nations budgets or from extrabudgetary resources, in developing multidisciplinary training, education and information activities for law enforcement and other criminal justice personnel, including police officers, prosecutors, judges and magistrates.

DRAFT RESOLUTION VII

Elements of responsible crime prevention: standards and norms

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 46/152 of 18 December 1991, on the creation of an effective United Nations crime prevention and criminal justice programme,

Recalling its resolution 1992/22 of 30 July 1992, on the implementation of General Assembly resolution 46/152 concerning operational activities and coordination in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, in section VI of which it determined that crime prevention in urban areas and juvenile and violent criminality would be one of the priority themes that should guide the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Commission in the development of a detailed programme,

Recalling also its resolution 1995/9 of 24 July 1995, on guidelines for the prevention of urban crime,

Taking into account that a growing and undermining criminality highlights the inadequacy of conventional criminal policies and the need to urgently devise preventive approaches,

Considering that the challenge and magnitude of modern crime, including organized crime, combined with the insufficient resources of the criminal justice system, for example the overpopulation of prisons and overburdened criminal justice systems, reinforce the need for non-repressive crime prevention,

Considering that an international effort is necessary to develop an effective strategy on responsible crime prevention,

1. Takes note of the preliminary draft of elements of responsible crime prevention: standards and norms annexed to the present resolution;

* For the discussion, see chapter VII.
2. Requests the Secretary-General to seek comments from Member States, relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the institutes comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, on the annex to this resolution, including the advisability of elaborating such an instrument;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice on the comments received at a future session of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to organize, drawing upon extrabudgetary funds, an ad hoc expert group meeting to examine the comments and to elaborate proposals for further action and to report thereon to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice;

5. Urges Member States and relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the institutes comprising the United Nations Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Programme network, to extend to the Secretary-General their full support in implementing this resolution.

Annex

Elements of responsible crime prevention: standards and norms

I. THE CONCEPT OF CRIME PREVENTION

1. The prevention of crime through non-punitive measures is to be considered an important complement to the administration of criminal law. It constitutes a legitimate response by society to threats to the safety of citizens posed by criminal acts.

2. The concept of crime prevention should not be limited to conventional forms of crime, including domestic violence, but should encompass new forms of crime, such as organized crime, terrorism, illegal trafficking in migrants, computer and cybercrimes, environmental crime, corruption and illegal commerce related to the acquisition and development of weapons of mass destruction.

3. The concept of crime prevention should take into account the growing internationalization of criminal activities and the relationship between the global economy, advanced technologies and national phenomena of crime, with special consideration for developing countries.

II. RESPONSIBLE CRIME PREVENTION

4. Under all circumstances measures of crime prevention should be carried out in strict conformity with the relevant provisions of international law and international standards of human rights.

5. Crime prevention should respect principles such as the rule of law, the protection of individual rights and freedoms, the principle of equality before the law and due process.
6. Whenever preventive measures are adopted which do not infringe upon the principles set out in paragraphs 4 and 5 above but affect human rights, they have to be implemented in strict accordance with the principle of the rule of law and of proportionality.

7. If the impact of a preventive measure on human rights is comparable to a penal measure, the same legal guarantees, including controls by the courts or by an ombudsman, should be provided for.

8. Measures which touch upon the rights of those who are considered to be at risk of becoming offenders should be handled in strict accordance with the principles set out in paragraphs 4 and 5 above [with great restraint]. Prediction of future criminality at the individual level requires a high degree of caution and stigmatization should be avoided. However, this should not obviate the development of secondary prevention programmes for persons with known risk factors.

9. In the planning and implementation of preventive measures, affirmative action may play a role but discrimination should always be avoided.

10. If the police are a partner in the implementation of prevention programmes, their participation should not be hidden and any confusion of roles should be avoided. Data collected in relation to prevention programmes should be used for criminal investigation of only serious crime.

11. Law should define the limits within which the private security sector may act. The private security sector should, in accordance with human rights standards, not exercise any function which, by its nature, is incompatible with the rule of law and the principle that the use of force is reserved for the State.

12. Codes of conduct for public officials and other persons involved are useful supplements to legal regulations in order to reduce the risks connected with preventive measures.

13. Preventive measures that do not in any way affect the rights of individuals need little legal regulation. Over-regulation in this respect would unduly limit the development of these types of measures.

III. THE PROMOTION OF RESPONSIBLE CRIME PREVENTION

14. Governments should take appropriate steps to promote and to regulate crime prevention through the establishment of special councils or other agencies, the provisions for funding, and the dissemination of information. Crime prevention programmes should be developed and implemented in collaboration with the police, municipalities, the private sector and other interested parties in a manner that clearly sets objectives and defines roles.

15. Crime prevention strategies at the national, local and community levels should also address the root causes of crime through social, economic, public health and educational policies. Where appropriate, crime prevention programmes should be linked to comprehensive programmes addressing social marginalization and exclusion.

16. Community-based programmes of crime prevention that include the active participation of citizens, the business sector, the police and other relevant parties should be encouraged and developed. These programmes should avoid activities with the potential to affect the rights of others.
17. Crime prevention targeting groups at risk of becoming offenders, especially youth, should be promoted and should include educational opportunities, employment, housing and leisure facilities. These measures should avoid stigmatization of the target groups.

18. Where necessary, educational support, inter alia instructing parental skills, and special medical care, should be offered as early as possible to families with children at risk. Steps should be taken to ensure that these provisions do not stigmatize the clients or infringe upon their rights.

19. Situational crime prevention programmes should be developed, to include target hardening, environmental design and surveillance. These programmes should not unduly reduce the quality of the built environment or limit free access to the public domain or public facilities.

20. Victim-oriented crime prevention consisting of, inter alia, the provision of information and advice to potential victims, should be promoted. Steps should be taken to avoid the undue rise of fear of crime or the stigmatization of the target groups.

21. Victims of crime should be offered protection, where necessary, and should be informed of possible ways to reduce the risks of future victimization, with due consideration for the rights of offenders. Due regard should be given to how to avoid the tendency to blame the victim, as well as reparation by the offender.

22. To promote prevention, provisions should be made available or strengthened for out-of-court mediation in appropriate penal matters, if this option is foreseen in national legislation. Procedures should comply with the principles of due process.

23. Research on crime prevention, including evaluation studies, should be promoted, taking into account the interests and rights of all parties involved. The international exchange of information on best practices, in terms of both effectiveness and respect for human rights, should be facilitated.

DRAFT RESOLUTION VIII

Implementation of the United Nations Declaration on Crime and Public Security

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 51/60 of 12 December 1996, in which the Assembly, convinced that the adoption of a declaration on crime and public security would contribute to the enhancement of the struggle against serious transnational crime, approved the United Nations Declaration on Crime and Public Security,

   (e) A summary of existing or proposed victim assistance programmes or systems;

   (f) A summary of existing or proposed legislation to combat the transnational flow of the proceeds of serious transnational crime, including measures to require adequate record-keeping and reporting of suspicious transactions by financial and related institutions, to permit the seizure and forfeiture of the proceeds of crime, to limit the application of any bank secrecy laws with respect to criminal operations and to obtain the cooperation of financial institutions in detecting any operations that may be used for money-laundering;

   (g) A summary of measures undertaken to combat and prohibit corruption and bribery;

3. Urges all Member States to respond fully to the request by the Secretary-General for information on their efforts to implement the Declaration, either in their initial responses if they have not yet responded or, if necessary, in an amended version of any previous response;

4. Recognizes that the Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice Division of the Secretariat should continue to provide technical assistance to Member States in their efforts to implement the Declaration, drawing on extrabudgetary resources;

8. Decides that the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, at its eighth session, should review the report of the Secretary-General and should continue to consider the implementation of the Declaration.

KAMPALA DECLARATION ON PRISON CONDITIONS IN AFRICA

PRISON CONDITIONS:

Considering that in many countries in Africa the level of overcrowding in prisons is inhuman, that there is a lack of hygiene, insufficient or poor food, difficult access to medical care, a lack of physical activities or education, as well as an inability to maintain family ties,

Bearing in mind that any person who is denied freedom has a right to human dignity,

Bearing in mind that the universal norms on human rights place an absolute prohibition on torture of any description,

Bearing in mind that some groups of prisoners, including juveniles, women, the old, the mentally and physically ill, are especially vulnerable and require particular attention,

Bearing in mind that juveniles must be separated from adult prisoners and that they must be treated in a manner appropriate to their age,

Remembering the importance of proper treatment for female detainees and the need to recognize their special needs,

The participants at the International Seminar on Prison Conditions in Africa, held in Kampala from 19 to 21 September 1996, recommend:

1. That the human rights of prisoners should be safeguarded at all times and that non-governmental agencies should have a special role in this respect,

2. That prisoners should retain all rights which are not expressly taken away by the fact of their detention,

3. That prisoners should have living conditions which are compatible with human dignity,

4. That conditions in which prisoners are held and the prison regulations should not aggravate the suffering already caused by the loss of liberty,

123 The seminar was co-organized by Prison Reform International and the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, in partnership with the Foundation for Human Rights Initiative, the Uganda Government through the Prisons Department, and with the participation of the International Committee of the Red Cross and International Prisons Watch.
5. That the detrimental effects of imprisonment should be minimised so that prisoners do not lose their self-respect and sense of personal responsibility,

6. That prisoners should be given the opportunity to maintain and develop links with their families and the outside world,

7. That prisoners should be given access to education and skills training in order to make it easier for them to reintegrate into society after their release,

8. That special attention should be paid to vulnerable prisoners and that non-governmental organisations should be supported in their work with these prisoners,

9. That all the norms of the United Nations and the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights on the treatment of prisoners should be incorporated into national legislation in order to protect the human rights of prisoners,

10. That the Organization of African Unity and its member states should take steps to ensure that prisoners are detained in the minimum conditions of security necessary for public safety.

REMAND PRISONERS:

Considering that in most prisons in Africa a great proportion of prisoners are awaiting trial, sometimes for several years,

Considering that for this reason the procedures and policies adopted by the police, the prosecuting authorities and the judiciary can significantly influence prison overcrowding,

The participants at the International Seminar on Prison Conditions in Africa, held in Kampala from 19 to 21 September 1996, recommend:

1. That the police, the prosecuting authorities and the judiciary should be aware of the problems caused by prison overcrowding and should join the prison administration in seeking solutions to reduce this,

2. That judicial investigations and proceedings should ensure that prisoners are kept in remand detention for the shortest possible period, avoiding, for example, continual remands in custody by the court,

3. That there should be a system for regular review of the time detainees spend on remand.

PRISON STAFF:

Considering that any improvement in conditions for prisoners will be dependent on staff having pride in their work and a proper level of competence,

Bearing in mind that this will only happen if staff are properly trained,
The participants at the International Seminar on Prison Conditions in Africa, held in Kampala from 19 to 21 September 1996, recommend:

1. That there should be a proper career structure for prison staff,

2. That all prison personnel should be linked to one government ministry and that there should be a clear line of command between central prison administration and the staff in prisons,

3. That the State should provide sufficient material and financial resources for staff to carry out their work properly,

4. That in each country there should be an appropriate training programme for prison staff to which UNAFRI should be invited to contribute,

5. That there should be a national or subregional institution to deliver this training programme,

6. That the penitentiary administration should be directly involved in the recruitment of prison staff.

ALTERNATIVE SENTENCING:

Noting that in an attempt to reduce prison overcrowding, some countries have been trying to find a solution through amnesties, pardons or by building new prisons,

Considering that overcrowding causes a variety of problems including difficulties for overworked staff,

Taking into account the limited effectiveness of imprisonment, especially for those serving short sentences, and the cost of imprisonment to the whole of society,

Considering the growing interest in African countries in measures which replace custodial sentences, especially in the light of human rights principles,

Considering that community service and other non-custodial measures are innovative alternatives to imprisonment and that there are promising developments in Africa to this regard,

Considering that compensation for damage done is an important element of non-custodial sentences,

Considering that legislation can be introduced to ensure that community service and other non-custodial measures will be imposed as an alternative to imprisonment,

The participants at the International Seminar on Prison Conditions in Africa, held in Kampala from 19 to 21 September 1996, recommend:

1. That petty offenses should be dealt with according to customary practice, provided this meets human rights requirements and that those involved so agree,

2. That whenever possible petty offenses should be dealt with by mediation and should be resolved between the parties involved without recourse to the criminal justice system,
3. That the principle of civil reparation or financial recompense should be applied, taking into account the financial capability of the offender or of his or her parents,

4. That the work done by the offender should if possible recompense the victim,

5. That the community service and other non-custodial measures should if possible be preferred to imprisonment,

6. That there should be a study of feasibility of adapting successful African models of non-custodial measures and applying them in countries where they are not yet being used,

7. That the public should be educated about the objectives of these alternatives and how they work.

AFRICAN COMMISSION ON HUMAN AND PEOPLES’ RIGHTS:

Considering that the African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights has the mandate to ensure the promotion and the protection of human and peoples’ rights in Africa,

Considering that the Commission has shown on many occasions its special concern on the subject of poor prison conditions in Africa and that it has adopted special resolutions and decisions on this question previously,

The participants at the International Seminar on Prison Conditions in Africa, held in Kampala from 19 to 21 November 1996, recommend that the African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights:

1. Should continue to attach priority to the improvement of prison conditions throughout Africa,

2. Should nominate a Special Rapporteur on Prisons in Africa as soon as possible,

3. Should make the Member States aware of the recommendations contained in this Declaration and publicize United Nations and African norms and standards on imprisonment,

4. Should cooperate with non-governmental organizations and other qualified institutions in order to ensure that the recommendations of this Declaration are implemented in all the Member States.

C. Draft decision for adoption by the Economic and Social Council

3. The Commission also recommends to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of the following draft decision:
