The Vienna Discussion Forum 2023 will highlight challenges, lessons learned and promising practices on addressing gender equality and corruption for an efficient, sustainable, inclusive and just transition to a green economy that encourages innovation. Informed by the work of UNIDO and UNODC, among others, the event will further analyze the linkages between gender equality and corruption; highlight the correlation between transparency, efficiency, sustainability and gender equality; and explore solutions for the key challenges women and other marginalized groups in situation of disadvantage.
face in fully participating and leading in the green economy. To this end, the event will provide examples of how anti-corruption initiatives can go hand in hand with efforts to advance gender equality and social inclusion within the green economy.

To ensure diverse attendance, representation of key stakeholders, and the broad use of recommendations emanating from the event, specific emphasis will be put on engaging relevant actors, including youth groups, students and young people active in the gender, corruption and green economy space. In this regard, students from the Diplomatic Academy Vienna, the Central European University and the AIESEC network in Vienna will be invited to attend the event, contribute to formulating questions for the panel, and possibly also contributing to developing recommendations on this year’s theme.
