I. Introduction

1. In its resolution 55/61 of 4 December 2000, the General Assembly recognized that an effective international legal instrument against corruption, independent of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime¹ was desirable; decided to begin the elaboration of such an instrument in Vienna at the headquarters of the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention; requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report analysing all relevant international instruments, other documents and recommendations addressing corruption and to submit it to the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice; and requested the Commission, at its tenth session, to review and assess the report of the Secretary-General and, on that basis, to provide recommendations and guidance as to future work on the development of a legal instrument against corruption.

2. In the same resolution, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to convene, upon completion of the negotiation of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the related protocols, an intergovernmental open-ended expert group to examine and prepare, on the basis of the report of the Secretary-General and of the recommendations of the Commission at its tenth session, draft terms of reference for the negotiation of the future legal instrument against corruption.

3. In its resolution 55/188 of 20 December 2000, the General Assembly reiterated its request to the Secretary-General, as contained in resolution 55/61, to convene an intergovernmental open-ended expert group to examine and prepare draft terms of reference for the negotiation of the future legal instrument against corruption, and invited the expert group to examine the question of illegally transferred funds and the return of such funds to the countries of origin.

4. The Economic and Social Council, upon the recommendation of the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its tenth session, adopted resolution 2001/... of 24 July 2001, entitled "Strengthening international cooperation in preventing and combating the transfer of funds of illicit origin, derived from acts of corruption, including the laundering of funds, and in returning such funds". In that resolution, the Council requested the inter-governmental open-ended expert group referred to in General Assembly resolution 55/61 to consider, within the context of its mandates, the following issues, inter alia, as possible items of work to be included in the draft terms of reference for the negotiation of a future legal instrument against corruption: (a) strengthening international cooperation in preventing and combating the transfer of funds of illicit origin, including the laundering of funds derived from acts of corruption, and promoting ways and means of enabling the return of such funds; (b) developing the measures necessary to ensure that those working in banking systems and other financial institutions contribute to the prevention of the transfer of funds of illicit origin derived from acts of corruption, for example, by recording transactions in a transparent manner, and to facilitate the return of those funds; (c) defining funds derived from acts of corruption as proceeds of crime and establishing that an act of corruption may be a predicate offence in relation to money-laundering; and (d) determining the appropriate countries to which funds, referred to above, should be returned and the appropriate procedures for such return.

II. Matters calling for action by the General Assembly

5. Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 55/61, the Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group to Prepare Draft Terms of Reference for the Negotiation of an International Legal Instrument against Corruption brings to the attention of the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, through the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its reconvened tenth session and the Economic and Social Council, the following draft resolution for its consideration and action:

Recalling also its resolution 51/191 of 12 December 1996, by which it adopted the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions,

Recalling further its resolution 55/61 of 4 December 2000, in which it established an ad hoc committee for the negotiation of an effective international legal instrument against corruption, and requested the Secretary-General to convene an intergovernmental open-ended expert group to examine and prepare draft terms of reference for the negotiation of such an instrument,

Recalling its resolution 55/188 of 20 December 2000, in which it invited the intergovernmental open-ended expert group convened pursuant to resolution 55/61 to examine the question of illegally transferred funds and the return of such funds to the country of origin,

III. Organization of the meeting

A. Opening of the meeting

6. The Meeting of the Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group to Prepare Draft Terms of Reference for the Negotiation of a Future Legal Instrument against Corruption was held in Vienna from 30 July to 3 August 2001. The Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group held five plenary meetings and four informal consultations.

7. Following the election of officers (see para. 10), the Chairman invited the Executive Director of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat to make an opening statement.

8. In his opening statement, the Executive Director of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention stated that corruption was a phenomenon that dated from the very beginnings of organized human society. Corruption was as much a reality in industrialized countries as in countries with economies in transition and developing countries. While in recent times the number of cases of large-scale corruption had been growing, large-scale theft of public money was not the only form of corruption. Millions of people lived in places where they were obliged to pay bribes to obtain services that were considered a right under the law. Over time, corrupt practices reinforced poverty by making services available only to those who could afford them. Over the past 10 years, public resistance had begun to solidify against the more outrageous forms of corruption and political consensus to form, along with a deeper understanding of the links between corruption and poverty. The International Code of Conduct for Public Officials and the United Nations Declaration against Corruption and Bribery in International Commercial Transactions, adopted by the General Assembly in 1996 (see resolutions 51/59 and 51/191, respectively), as well as the Convention on Combating Bribery of Foreign Public Officials in International Business Transactions, adopted by the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) on 21 November 1997, and other regional initiatives were proof of the shift in political consensus and public opinion. Political consensus, development policy and public opinion had converged around the demand that the law must apply to everyone. There was general agreement that corruption must be approached simultaneously from several sides. The spirit that had made possible the finalization of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime was a solid basis for the development of a new global instrument that could propel the international community one important step further in the dynamic process of changing corruption from the secret that everyone knew about into the public enemy that the international community was determined to defeat.

B. Attendance

9. The Meeting of the Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group was attended by representatives of 97 States. E. Documentation

12. A list of documents is contained in annex II to the present report.

IV. Summary of the discussion

13. Turning the attention of the Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group to item 4 of its agenda, the Chairman suggested that the draft terms of reference the Expert Group had been mandated to prepare should achieve the following two objectives: (a) to provide organizational guidance that would ensure a successful negotiating process, giving the Ad Hoc Committee for the Negotiation of an International Legal Instrument against Corruption, established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 55/61, sufficient flexibility to fulfil its tasks, while enabling the Secretariat to service it in an efficient manner; and (b) to provide a workable and flexible framework that would guide the Ad Hoc Committee in developing the new international legal instrument, taking into account the views and concerns of all States. In order to achieve those objectives, the Chairman proposed that the Expert Group first hear the statements of the representatives of regional groups and then conduct a general discussion. Upon completion of that general discussion, the Chairman intended, in consultation with the members of the Bureau, to summarize the main elements of the draft terms of reference in a draft resolution, which he would submit to the Expert Group for consideration and action.

14. The representative of Egypt, speaking on behalf of the Group of 77 and China, stressed the great importance attached by the members of the Group of 77 and China to the development of an effective and binding international legal instrument against corruption in order to tackle corruption more effectively and efficiently as well as to help Member States in building integrity to prevent and fight corruption and to face the challenges posed by transnational corruption. The terms of reference for the future legal instrument should include, inter alia, broad definitions, including all aspects relating to public and private corruption; a broad scope of application; a set of preventive measures; a chapter on criminalization of acts of corruption; and a chapter on mutual legal assistance and cooperation that would foster international cooperation, exchange of information that would facilitate tracing of funds and transfer of funds of illicit origin connected with corruption in order to ensure the repatriation of those funds, forfeiture and confiscation of the proceeds from corruption and the possibility of shifting the burden of proof and banking secrecy, and the rendering of technical assistance, especially to developing countries. An international follow-up mechanism should be considered to ensure implementation of those initiatives. The Group of 77 and China were of the view that the Bureau of the Ad Hoc Committee should be elected by the Committee itself in such a way as to ensure equitable regional representation and that the Ad Hoc Committee should complete its work in 2003.

15. The representative of Uruguay, speaking on behalf of the Group of Latin American and Caribbean States, confirmed the commitment of the members of the Group to participate actively in the fight against corruption and stressed the need to codify and strengthen international rules against the phenomenon in order to ensure transparency in both the public and the private sector. The members of the Group expressed the view that the instrument referred to in General Assembly resolution 55/61 should be an independent, binding instrument, which should have the form of a convention. While leaving to the Ad Hoc Committee established pursuant to resolution 55/61 the substantive discussion on the theoretical and practical aspects of the convention, the members of the Group were of the view that the Expert Group should identify the basic framework to guide the work of the Ad Hoc Committee. In that connection, the following elements were identified by the members of the Group for possible inclusion in the new convention: definitions, which should include aspects related to the definition of civil servants as well as to the concept of public service and corporate activities related to it; effective measures for the prevention, control and fight against corruption in both the public and private sector, including the involvement of civil society, the training of civil servants, the establishment of mechanisms to protect so-called "whistle-blowers" and the establishment of national independent anti-corruption bodies; scope of application; criminalization, which should include transnational bribery, illicit enrichment and laundering of the proceeds of corruption; liability of legal and natural persons; international cooperation, including exchange of information, training, extradition and mutual legal assistance; measures to prevent and fight the transfer of funds of illicit origin and the laundering of proceeds derived from corruption activities, as well as measures to facilitate the repatriation of such funds; technical assistance; and the establishment of a multilateral mechanism to monitor the application of the convention.

16. The representative of Belgium addressed the Expert Group on behalf of the States members of the European Union. Bulgaria, Cyprus, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Poland, Slovakia and Turkey also associated themselves with the statement. The representative of Belgium made reference to the Final Declaration of the Second Global Forum on Fighting Corruption and Safeguarding Integrity, held in The Hague, from 28 to 31 May 2001, which contained important elements for the work of the Expert Group, as well as to the different instruments developed within the framework of the European Union, as they could provide expertise in the development of a global strategy against corruption. The members of the European Union emphasized that the new instrument should set high global standards and should be compatible with the principles of existing anti-corruption instruments. The members of the Union underlined that as many countries as possible should be able to subscribe to the commitment to be expressed in the new instrument and that there should be an open dialogue among countries during the negotiation process, paying particular attention to the concerns of developing countries and countries with economies in transition. The States members of the European Union expressed the view that the new instrument could be nothing else but a convention, should contain both preventive and enforcement measures and follow a multidisciplinary approach. In addition, the following main elements were identified for possible inclusion in the new instrument: criminalization; prevention; technical assistance; and a monitoring mechanism. Regarding criminalization, reference was made to the instruments developed by the Council of Europe, the European Union and OECD. The new instrument should follow a broad and flexible approach and cover active and passive corruption in the public sector, of both national and foreign civil servants, including international civil servants. Likewise, the mandate of the ad hoc committee should include discussion of active and passive corruption in the private sector, as well as other offences connected to corruption. The new instrument should address laundering of the proceeds of corruption and their seizure and confiscation as well as international cooperation in that regard. The provisions of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime represented a good example to follow. The question of the return of funds of illicit origin should also be addressed in an effective and satisfactory manner. The European Union stressed that criminalization and sanction models should respect human rights and fundamental freedoms. Regarding prevention, the European Union was of the view that preventive measures were necessary to develop a global strategy against corruption and that they should be based on fundamental principles, such as good governance, integrity and transparency. The European Union considered it important also to include mechanisms to provide technical assistance to developing countries and countries with economies in transition, as well as the establishment of a monitoring mechanism, which should be based on the equality of obligations and be effective and flexible.

17. The representative of Morocco, speaking on behalf of the Group of African States, stated that there was consensus in the international community that urgent and serious action against corruption must be taken, at both the national and the international level. According to the Group, the future instrument against corruption should be independent, comprehensive and internationally binding. The purpose and scope of the instrument would make it possible to launch an effective fight against all forms of corruption, at the national and international levels, with prevention, detection, investigation, punishment and eradication of corruption; and to identify means to facilitate and regulate cooperation between States for the attainment of the objectives of the instrument. Its scope of application should include all forms of corruption. The definitions should address the concept of corruption in the broadest sense possible. The representative of Morocco stressed that prevention and law enforcement were equally crucial elements in the fight against corruption and should be reflected in the future legal instrument. Penal sanctions should be supplemented by disciplinary, administrative and civil law sanctions. The Group of African States also stressed the need to strengthen cooperation between law enforcement agencies, the reinforcement of mutual legal assistance and the bridging of differences in legal systems. In addition, the future instrument should contain provisions on money-laundering and on the return of the proceeds of corruption and illegally transferred funds. The Group of African States requested the Ad Hoc Committee to complete its work not later than 2003.

18. The representative of Jordan, speaking on behalf of the Group of Asian and Pacific States, endorsed the statement made by the representative of Egypt on behalf of the Group of 77 and China and expressed deep concern about the spread of corruption, which undermined society and its development, affecting in particular the poor. The members of the Group of Asian and Pacific States affirmed that they attach great importance to the development of the future international legal instrument against corruption and that they believed that the outcome of the Expert Group Meeting would play a central role in laying down the parameters for the development of an effective, credible, independent and binding instrument. According to the members of the Group, there should be a clear definition of corruption that covered both the private and public sectors and that the process of drafting the new instrument should be driven by the same considerations that had characterized the negotiations of the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime. The Group believed that the primary aim of the new convention should be to foster international cooperation. However, particular care should be taken that the integrity of domestic legal systems was not compromised. The Group believed that the scope of application of the new convention must be responsive to the concerns of all States, particularly on the sensitive issue of sovereign equality, territorial integrity and non-interference in the domestic affairs of States.

19. The representative of Japan stated that his country could not fully associate itself with the statement made by the representative of Jordan on behalf of the Group of Asian and Pacific States, insofar as that representative had endorsed the statement of the representative of Egypt on behalf of the Group of 77 and China.

20. In order to facilitate the work of the Expert Group, the Chairman, following consultations with the members of the Bureau, proposed that the discussion be structured along the following lines: (a) nature of the international legal instrument against corruption; (b) matters pertaining to the content of the new instrument, for possible consideration by the Ad Hoc Committee; and (c) matters pertaining to the procedure to be followed for the negotiation process.

21. During the discussion that ensued, consensus emerged on the fact that the instrument should be a convention and numerous speakers supported the proposal that its title should be “United Nations Convention against Corruption”. Some delegations felt that the title should contain some reference to the concepts of safeguarding integrity and promoting good governance.

22. Several delegations pointed out that key principles constituting the rationale and philosophical basis of the new draft convention should be enunciated, perhaps in a preamble.

23. Other delegations stressed the usefulness of not excluding the possibility that there might eventually be an annex or protocol to the new convention, which could include, for example, a code of conduct or code of ethics, that would apply, inter alia, to public officials. Some other delegations questioned whether the group of experts should be suggesting an annex or protocol at the current stage. According to some delegations, another issue that would need to be considered was the relationship of the new convention to existing conventions.

24. Some delegations pointed out that the new convention should be developed with full respect for the principles of sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-interference in the internal affairs of States and with appreciation for differing legal systems.

25. It was pointed out that the new convention should be developed taking into account existing international legal instruments against corruption in order to ensure consistency and avoid unnecessary duplication. It was deemed important to ensure that the new convention would build on the achievements of those instruments and not set lower standards. Further, it was pointed out that the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime contained many provisions that encompassed useful solutions and represented significant achievements, reached by consensus. To the extent appropriate, the new convention should make full use of those provisions in order to facilitate and expedite the process of negotiation.

26. As regards the possible content of the new convention, there was general agreement that the Expert Group should be mindful of its mandate, which was to prepare draft terms of reference for the negotiation of the new convention. In that connection, there was consensus that it was essential to ensure that the ad hoc committee established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 55/61 be vested with maximum flexibility, as a key condition for the successful fulfilment of its assigned tasks. With that in mind and assisted by an informal discussion paper submitted to it by the Chairman in consultation with the other members of the Bureau, the Expert Group focused its discussion on a number of elements for consideration by the ad hoc committee. Those elements were definitions; scope; criminalization; prevention; sanctions; confiscation and seizure; international cooperation, including extradition, mutual legal assistance and law enforcement cooperation and exchange of information; technical assistance; transfer of funds of illicit origin and return of such funds; and mechanisms for monitoring implementation. The Expert Group felt that the list of elements should include jurisdiction, liability of legal persons, collection, exchange and analysis of information and protection of witnesses and victims. There was general agreement that the list was not intended to be exhaustive and that the final determination of which elements would be discussed and in what form was incumbent upon the ad hoc committee, which was the body mandated by the General Assembly to negotiate the new convention.

27. Some delegations were of the view that the new convention should be a broad-based instrument encompassing all forms of corruption. In particular, some delegations made reference to the need to cover public and private, active and passive corruption, trafficking in influence, international bribery, improper use of state property, obstruction of justice and abuse of power. According to some other delegations, the new convention should apply to domestic, foreign and international civil servants, as well as to politicians. Some other delegations expressed the view that there should be a definition of those performing a “public function”, to whom the new convention should also extend. Other delegations advised caution, because attempting to broaden the approach excessively was fraught with many conceptual, legal and policy-related difficulties. That discussion notwithstanding, there was broad support for a comprehensive and multidisciplinary approach in developing the new convention.

28. Some delegations stressed the importance of including civil and administrative law measures in addition to criminal provisions. They considered that such an approach would provide a higher probability of efficiency and effectiveness, because of the multifaceted nature of corruption and the need to address those issues under diverse legal systems. In that connection, some delegations made reference to the need to include in the new convention civil and criminal liability, remedies and sanctions, in addition to relevant preventive measures. In the view of some delegations, criminal law measures against corruption would need to include the reversal of the burden of proof and the lifting of bank secrecy. According to other delegations, criminalization of illicit enrichment was also necessary. Other delegations voiced concern regarding the reversal of the onus of proof, as that would run contrary to constitutional principles or international obligations and would thus be difficult to envisage.

29. It was the general view of the Expert Group that prevention should be an important element of the new convention. It was therefore essential to strike a balance between prevention and enforcement measures in developing the new instrument. Prevention was perceived by some delegations as including the promotion of integrity, transparency and good governance. Specific preventive measures could include development of codes of conduct or ethics, an effective and impartial civil service, effective systems for financing political parties, establishment of independent oversight bodies, free and transparent media, transparent public procurement rules, effective regulation of financial systems, denial of tax deductibility of bribes, an independent judiciary and the effective implementation of the rule of law. In that context, some delegations, however, stressed the point that in that area the group should not duplicate the work already done by United Nations institutions and other international organizations of a global nature (e.g., the World Trade Organization or the World Bank). Many delegations expressed the view that, in order to be effective, prevention should address the social and economic factors that were associated with corruption. Many delegations also stressed the importance of both the involvement and participation of civil society in preventing corruption and the promotion of public awareness. In that connection, the view was expressed that the ad hoc committee should take into account the contributions of non-governmental organizations, as well as those of national and regional auditing bodies.

30. Many delegations deemed it essential that the new convention effectively address the question of the transfer of funds or assets of illicit origin derived from acts of corruption and the need to develop adequate measures to ensure the return of such funds or assets. Some delegations were of the view that, in that connection, the question of identification of the legitimate beneficiary of funds or assets of illicit origin, as well as the question of title over those funds or assets would need to be addressed. Extensive reference was made to Economic and Social Council resolution 2001/..., which constituted a useful basis for the deliberations of the ad hoc committee on the matter.

31. Many delegations emphasized the importance of effective mechanisms for monitoring the implementation of the new convention. For some delegations those mechanisms should be regional or multilateral. According to those delegations, several existing international legal instruments provided useful sources of inspiration in that regard. Other delegations expressed concern regarding the appropriateness of regional and multilateral mechanisms, as they had a bearing on sovereignty matters, and preferred national monitoring mechanisms.

32. The Expert Group also discussed matters pertaining to the organization of the negotiation process. There was general agreement that the ad hoc committee should elect its own bureau, which should be composed of two representatives of each of the five regional groups. There was also general agreement that the new convention should be concluded by the end of 2003. Regarding the number and duration of the sessions of the ad hoc committee, the views expressed ranged from two to six sessions of one or two weeks each per year. On the recommendation of the Chairman, the Expert Group agreed that the ad hoc committee should meet as required, holding no fewer than three sessions of two weeks each per year.

33. The Expert Group placed particular emphasis on the need for the broadest possible participation of countries in the work of the ad hoc committee. The Expert Group was therefore of the view that, following the practice of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Elaboration of a Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, donor countries should be called upon to make resources available to the United Nations to cover the cost of participation of developing countries, in particular least developed countries, including local expenses.

V. Presentation on the Global Programme against Corruption

34. Representatives of the Global Programme against Corruption presented to the Expert Group a 40-minute overview of the activities of the Global Programme, as the meeting was an ideal opportunity to brief such an expert audience on the Programme and its ability to provide technical assistance to Member States. The representatives described the overall objective of the Global Programme against Corruption, its focus, integrated approach and current initiatives, and outlined some of the key lessons learned.

35. Several delegations offered comments and posed questions on the Global Programme and made positive remarks about the actions undertaken against corruption by the Centre for International Crime Prevention of the Office for Drug Control and Crime Prevention of the Secretariat. Topics included judicial corruption, accountability, reversal of the burden of proof, empowerment of victims, corporate corruption and causes of corruption. Many delegates welcomed the development of an anti-corruption tool kit and suggested that new tools should be developed to address areas such as ethics, education of youth, civil service reform and asset recovery. Other delegations stressed that there was no single model of a system to fight corruption and that the inception and implementation of appropriate measures should take into account the diversity of legal systems and traditions of States.

VI. Informal consultations

36. In agreement with the members of the Bureau, the Chairman of the Meeting decided to hold informal consultations under the Chairmanship of Ambassador Abdulkadir Bin Rimdap (Nigeria), Vice-Chairman. The Expert Group held four informal consultations. The main purpose of the consultations was to finalize a draft resolution proposed by the Chairman, entitled "Terms of reference for the negotiation of a United Nations convention against corruption". The consultations focused attention on discussing the various elements to be considered by the ad hoc committee for inclusion in the draft convention.

37. The consultations also dealt with organizational and procedural matters, including the number and duration of future sessions of the ad hoc committee and the composition of its Bureau, as well as participation of States and non-governmental organizations in those sessions. The consultations led to agreement on a consensus text, which was submitted to the Expert Group for consideration and action.

VII. Adoption of the report of the Meeting of the Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group to Prepare Draft Terms of Reference for the Negotiation of an International Legal Instrument against Corruption

38. At its fifth meeting, on 3 August 2001, the Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group to Prepare Draft Terms of Reference for the Negotiation of an International Legal Instrument against Corruption adopted the draft resolution contained in chapter II of the present report and decided to submit it to the General Assembly at its fifty-sixth session, through the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice at its reconvened tenth session and the Economic and Social Council, for adoption in accordance with General Assembly resolution 55/61.

39. The representative of the Netherlands stated that his delegation had accepted the text of operative paragraph 5 of the draft resolution on the understanding that it would not prevent the ad hoc committee established pursuant to General Assembly resolution 55/61 from being inspired by any other relevant instruments and documents addressing corruption.

40. The representative of Croatia associated himself with the statement made by the representative of the Netherlands. He also stated that his delegation understood the term "multidisciplinary approach", contained in paragraph 3 of the draft resolution, to include criminal, civil and administrative law aspects.

41. The representative of the United States stated that the divergence in the understanding of the term “multidisciplinary approach” underscored the need to take into account differences in legal systems. Her delegation understood it to signify not only criminalization measures, but also a wide range of preventive measures involved in such a complex subject matter.

42. The representative of Nigeria stated that the protection of sovereignty referred to in paragraph 3 of the draft resolution should not be understood or used in a way that would impede the efforts of countries seeking to recover illicit assets.

43. The representative of Cameroon associated himself with the statement made by the representative of Nigeria and added that domestic legislation should not function as an impediment to the efforts of countries seeking to recover illicit assets, because that would defeat the objective of strengthening international cooperation.

44. The Chairman concluded by acknowledging with gratitude the offer of the Government of Argentina to act as host of an informal preparatory meeting of the ad hoc committee prior to its first session.

45. Also at its fifth meeting, the Intergovernmental Open-Ended Expert Group adopted the report on its Meeting (A/AC.260/L.1 and Add.1/Rev.1 and Add.2).
