"Light the Villages": Green Solar Energy for the African Villages

Susan KONE, President WFWP Kenya

Environmental Issue: Electrification of the rural households is still a challenge to many countries in Sub Saharan Africa. The problem of not enough water due to lack of enough rain creates a deficit in the production of Electricity in most African Countries, that being one of the factors. The Solution is Green Energy Solar Energy which can be used in homes and even in schools for the benefit of the families and children who still depend on Kerosene and firewood

"New Village development to support SDG Nr. 1 (no poverty), 4, 11, 12, 13, 15 (life on land)" Mag. Franz

NAHRADA: member of the Earth Society Foundation, founded in 1970 in UN NY under SG Sithu U Thant

"For 30 years, Mr. Nahrada has dealt with the issue of migration from rural areas to cities. The most common cause is a lack of educational opportunities. Using today's technology, the university can offer classes in any village. The current pandemic also shows the new possibilities of using technology for training from home. But the main yet unrecognized factor is a deep structural change towards the immense life-supporting potential of educated localities - fostered by global co-operation.

Mag. phil. Franz Nahrada, Sociologist and Writer Vienna and Bad Radkersburg, Austria, GIVE Research Lab

Is a vigorous advocate of rural areas as integral human habitat in its own rights, strictly opposing the "inevitable total urbanisation by 2050" narrative. His academic studies in sociology, philosophy and political science led to research on the genesis and failure of academic institutions to provide practical knowledge and understand and foster the conscious creation of social reality beyond predictions and forecasts that often tend to fail.

Which also means that instead of pursuing an academic career, he went on "learning journeys" and created an ever growing network of co-thinkers and inspiring people which he called the "Global Villages Network". He gathered practical experiences in software development at Apple Computer and in tourism as hotel manager of his ancestor's family hotel in Floridsdorf, Vienna. He also became a passionate facilitator of meetings and succeeded with the Vienna Global Village conferences (1993 - 2000) and the Cultural Heritage in the Global Village (CULTH) conferences (1998 and 2002) and others. Later he started to work directly with rural areas and to use the power of information technology to create "Village Innovation Talks" and eventually the "Village- University" or "Dorf Uni", a virtual educational networks that connects local communities with each other for direct knowledge exchange and with universities for co-operation on "reality labs". For several years he served as president of ECOVAST (European Council of villages and small towns) in Austria and also as the convener of the Equinox Earth Day (Earth Society Foundation) at UN Vienna.
